From Our Own Correspondent.

SUFFOLK, VA., Wednesday, April 15.

You have of course been informed of the rebel advance upon Suffolk. The alarm was first given in the Federal camps last Saturday afternoon, and the men were called to arms. Rumors that LONGSTREET was advancing with a large force and heavy pontoon trains had been circulating previously for two or three days, but were generally not credited. They were somewhat confirmed, however, by the reports of our cavalry, who had found the rebel pickets more bold, and in some cases crowding on our lines.

Apprehensions of an attack at headquarters were evident from the movements of a part of Gen. GETTY's division on Thursday and Friday. The alarm on Saturday was occasioned by our pickets in the direction of the Blackwater being suddenly forced back after a slight skirmish, in which several were taken prisoners. A deserter also coming in reported a large body of rebels near. Since Saturday night we have been expecting an attack at any hour, but thus far the fighting has been mostly between the sharpshooters and pickets thrown out on either side.

Our position is strongly fortified. A chain of forts connected by an almost continuous line of breastworks extends around Suffolk in an irregular semicircle nearly nine miles in length. The Nansemond, which here makes a large bend, lies in our rear, almost completing the circuit. Earthworks and rifle pits have been constructed along its banks, and batteries thrown up since Saturday. Five gunboats patrol the river to oppose any attempt to cross by the rebels.

On Monday the Smith Briggs, Argo, Washington, West End, and one other were lying in the river. One of them, the West End, was seriously injured on Tuesday by a rebel battery erected during Monday night on a bend of the river four miles below Suffolk. Seven men were shot on the West End at the time. These gunboats are of wood, and poorly protected. I learn that some iron-clads have been sent for.

The rebels lie in the woods on our front and rear. For three days these woods have been shelled by our gunboats and batteries wherever their camp fires were seen or their pickets thrown out. They have succeeded in digging a few rifle-pits in front of these woods, from which their sharpshooters annoy our men. On Monday morning our pickets were driven into our fortifications on the south and west, the rebels taking shelter in farm-houses and barns, scattered over the plain between our breastworks and the Dismal Swamp. During the forenoon, Col. SPEAR, of the Eleventh Pennsylvania cavalry, with a squad of cavalry, rode out to reconnoitre, and draw the fire of the rebels concealed on the edge of the woods, which were being shelled by our forts. They found a 12-pound brass howitzer posted in the Summerton road, and having received a sharp fire from the rebels, returned. Cavalry were then sent out to burn all the buildings, and in the afternoon our pickets advanced in force. After a sharp skirmish they drove back the enemy to the woods, and have maintained their position ever since. This has been accomplished, however, only by constant fighting with the enemy. Twice they have been supported by artillery, but thus far they have inflicted more injury upon the rebels than they have received. They found fifteen or twenty rifles left on the field by wounded rebels, and one of their dead.

A prisoner taken on the Edenton road reported that up to Tuesday night they had lost on our front forty in killed, wounded and missing. To-day's work must have added many to this number, for despite the heavy rain-storm there has been much skirmishing. The repeated shelling of the woods must have occasioned them severe loss.

The first section of the Massachusetts Seventh battery went out this afternoon with some of Col. SPEAR'S cavalry, to [set on fire a house used by the rebels in the woods. Their shells did not ignite, and in an unsuccessful attempt by half a dozen brave horsemen to burn it, we lost two killed. Many incidents of daring are constantly occurring in these skirmishes. Besides the regular details for picket duty, our brave soldiers, thus far disappointed in an attack, fill their cartridge boxes and go out to fight on their own account. A drummer boy, familiarly called "Chip" SMITH, of the One Hundred and Twelfth New-York Volunteers—whose details for pickets with the Thirteenth Indiana have thus far done some of the severest skirmishing with the enemy—borrowed a rifle of his Chaplain, went out to the advance line, wounded a rebel, and subsequently brought in his Mississippi rifle as a trophy.

The reports of prisoners and deserters agree in giving to the rebel Gen. LONGSTREET of a force of about 30,000. It consist of his entire corps d'armée of WOOD'S, PICKETT'S and JENKINS' divisions. The main force is thought to lie to the west and north of us. They are well supplied with artillery, but they maintain an ominous silence. With the exception of the battery on the river below us, they have not yet replied to our guns. It is difficult to discover the intentions of their General. Thus far he has skillfully managed his troops. They have nearly surrounded us, and on Tuesday night made three attempts to cross the Nansemond, in order to cut our communication with Norfolk. They were repulsed and their future attempts will be probably quite as unavailing.

Our forces are constantly throwing up fortifications along the river. The contrabands are doing willing and valuable service. Five or six hundred have been set to work, and have already raised eight earthworks. They easily understand the issues to them of an occupation of Suffolk by the rebels.

Our troops are in excellent condition, mentally and physically, for an attack. Maj.-Gen. PECK, in command of the post, is confident of holding it. Maj.-Gen. DIX is in Suffolk. He visited some of the fortifications on Tuesday, and was received with hearty cheers by our boys. All the sick—about four hundred in number, unable to bear arms—were yesterday sent to Fort Monroe. Strong reinforcements are expected to-morrow, who will make our position secure and enable us to act on the offensive, if necessary.

I send a list of the killed and wounded reported up to Wednesday night. L.

THE LATEST NEWS FROM SUFFOLK.

Skirmishing on Thursday in Gen. Corcoran's Front.

FROM SUFFOLK via FORTRESS MONROE, Friday, April 17.

Yesterday afternoon the enemy drove back our skirmishers on the Somerton road, which is Gen. CORCORAN'S front, and opened on Fort Union with two pieces of artillery. Our forts at once replied to them and drove them back. Our skirmishers on the South Quay road drove the enemy back some miles from our lines.

Deserters say, the enemy intend to make an attack this week. Guerrillas prowled about our flanks yesterday, killing one man and cut the telegraph wires, which were soon repaired.

Both railroads between Suffolk and Norfolk are in running order and amply guarded by cavalry patrols.

No letters are now allowed to be sent forward by flag of truce except to prisoners of war.

THE NANSEMOND RIVER FLOTILLA.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, April 18.

The steamer Baltimore arrived at the Navy-yard, this morning, from Fortress Monroe, bringing further particulars of the affair on the Nansemond.

The Mount Washington was towed to Newport's News, where she will be repaired. She received two shots in her boiler, and several struck her engines, damaging them considerably. Her wood-work is pierced through and through. One of the Minnesota's seamen, temporarily on the Mount Washington, was killed; but none of the men belonging to her were injured so as to keep them from duty, although many were struck by flying splinters and slightly hurt.

The pilot of the Stepping Stones lost one of his legs.

The gunboats in the Nansemond have received a reinforcement of gunboats from the Potomac flotilla, in order to keep the Nansemond clear of rebel batteries.

THE WAR IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Resume of Rebel Operations Against Gen. Foster.

A letter from an officer of the Forty-fourth Massachusetts regiment gives a connected account of affairs at Washington, North Carolina, up to the 10th instant. The first intimation of an intended rebel attack was received March 30th, when a negro who had been into the interior reported that he had seen seven thousand rebels with forty pieces of artillery marching upon the place, and that other forces were coming by different routes.

Reconnoissances were at once sent out, and the rebels discovered at various points. On the 31st, a company of loyal North Carolians holding an advanced position were attacked and driven in. A gunboat which had dropped down the river was also attacked, and several of her guns disabled. The rebels used Whitworth guns, furnished, of course, by "neutrals" over the water. On the 3d, it was ascertained that the rebels had additional guns mounted. Firing continued between the gunboats and the rebel batteries, and one of the guns of the latter was seen to be dismounted.

On the night of the 3d the gunboat Ceres ran the blockade, bringing ammunition for the fort and gunboats. On the 4th a small battery in front of the fort opened fire, and the fort replied, dismounting one of their guns, when the firing ceased. On the 5th provender for the horses gave out, and the families of the town were declared to be destitute. On the 7th the rebels opened fire on the gunboats, and also fired fifty-three discharges at the town, but without doing any injury. Meanwhile, the intrenchments of our forces were greatly strengthened—the men, though reduced to three-fourths rations, working with unflagging spirit. On the 9th another vessel ran the blockade with ammunition, and on the 10th the rebels again opened fire upon the fort, and kept it up for half an hour. Two shells struck inside the fort, two shot went through the flag on the fort, quite a number of shots struck the intrenchments, but no one was injured on our side. A day or so subsequently the garrison were relieved, and are now safe against any force the enemy may bring against them.

THE RECONNOISSANCE UNDER SPINOLA.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF COL. RICHMOND, THIRD MASSACHUSETTS VOLUNTEERS.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD REGIMENT MASS. V. M., CAMP JOURDAN, NEWBERNE, N. C., April 11, 1863.

To S. A. Ilsley, A. A. A. General Second Brigade, Eighteenth Army Corps:

SIR: The following is a correct report of the part taken by myself and command in the recent reconnoissance in force under Brig.-Gen. SPINOLA:

April 7, 6½ o'clock P. M.—Received orders to march immediately, with three days' cooked rations, and seven in bulk to follow. My command left camp at 7 P. M., marched to Foster's Wharf, and there embarked on the steamer Allison, which took us across the Neuse River. We landed near Fort Anderson and bivouacked for the night. I had with me 24 officers and 517 men.

April 8—Waited during the A. M., for the remainder of the troops to cross over. The troops were temporarily brigaded anew, my regiment being put in the first brigade, under command of Acting Brigadier AMERY. The whole column was under command of Gen. SPINOLA, and consisted of three brigades of five regiments each, with a small force of cavalry and artillery. The column moved at 1½ P. M., my regiment having the left of the First brigade. We marched in a northerly direction. The roads, for the most part, were very good, and the column moved fast. We made no halts for rest. We passed New-Hope School-house about sunset, taking the road to the left. We marched until 9 P. M., then bivouacked by the road-side. Distance marched, 15 miles.

April 9.—Our brigade moved at 6½ A. M., in the same order as yesterday. Marched back on the same road about four miles, then took a cross-road which led into the main road to Coir Point, and continued on the latter. Halted a short time for dinner, and then moved on until 3 P. M., when we got in close proximity to Swift Creek, and the enemy's pickets were met, two of them captured, and the rest driven in. The enemy almost immediately opened upon us with batteries on the other side of the creek. Our batteries moved to the front and engaged the enemy for about two hours without any apparent effect. The enemy's shell, though few in number, were excellently aimed, every one causing some loss on our side. Ammunition being nearly all expended, the orders were given to retire, which we did in good order, marching back to the cross roads near New-Hope School-house, and then bivouacked for the night, it being then about 9 P. M., and having marched during the day about thirty miles.

April 10.—The column was put in motion at about 7 A. M. Col. AMORY'S brigade having the lead, and marched left in front, which brought my regiment in advance. Reached the ferry near Fort Anderson at 10½ A. M., and after a little delay we were transported across the river, reaching Newbern at 12 M., having marched in all about 55 miles in less than forty-eight hours from the time of leaving Fort Anderson. I brought my men all safe into camp, although they were more completely tired out than at any previous time during the campaign. Respectfully submitted, S. P. RICHMOND,
Colonel Commmanding Regiment.

THE ATTEMPTS TO REINFORCE FOSTER.

From the Boston Courier, 17th.

A letter has been received in this city from an officer of the Massachusetts Forty-fourth regiment, dated inside the fort, Washington, N. C., April 10, which announces the death, at 10 o'clock A. M. that day, of Dr. ROBERT WARE, Surgeon of the Forty-fourth. Dr. WARE had been sick of fever for some days previous to his death. The writer expresses confidence in their ability to hold out until reinforcements arrive. The letter confirms thereport that two companies of the Forty-fourth had fallen into an ambuscade. Capt. RICHARDSON was wounded. Two or three of his men were also wounded, and it was found impossible to remove them, and they remained in the hands of the enemy. The rebels were firing at the fort on the 10th, but only two shots took effect inside, and no person had been injured by their firing. The rebels do not appear willing to run any risks, and they keep at a respectable distance from the fort. An officer, who arrived at Newbern from Washington on the 11th, having run the blockade, reports that Gen. FOSTER is in good spirits, and confident that he can hold out as long as the rebels can. So far his men are all safe. The expedition which went out under Gen. SPINOLA, some 8,000 strong, to reinforce Gen. FOSTER, had returned. Gen. SPINOLA encountered the rebels in considerable force at Blunt's Creek, nine miles from Washington, and after a slight skirmish faced about and went back to Newbern. In this affair Capt. BELGER, of a Rhode Island battery, and some seventeen of the Seventeenth Massachusetts, were wounded. These were the only casualties on our side. Gen. WESSEL was to start on Sunday morning with his brigade, on the same issue. The Massschusetts Third, Massachusetts Twenty-third and Fifth Rhode Island regiments had been dispatched by steamers, to attempt to run the blockade, and relieve Gen. FOSTER.

FROM THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

The Rumored Capture of Gordonsville by Gen. Stoneman.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, April 18.

The dispatch in the Tribune about the taking of Gordonsville was wholly unfounded. A knowledge of the distances involved in the statement would show that the march was impossible.

FROM ANOTHER CORRESPONDENT.

WALHINGTON, Saturday, April 18.

Rumors have been circulating here during the last twenty-four hours that our forces have driven the enemy from and occupied Gordonsville; but it is ascertained, after inquiry in the proper quarters, that there is nothing authentic to sustain such reports.

All is quiet in front to-day. MOSEBY'S forces were in the neighborhood of Drainesville yesterday.

Review of the First Army Corps by President Lincoln.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

FROM THE LEFT WING OF THE ARMY, Friday, April 10.

President LINCOLN reviewed the First Army Corps to-day, Maj.-Gen. REYNOLDS commanding. The President left headquarters about 10 o'clock in a carriage drawn by four horses, and accompanied by Mrs. LINCOLN. Gen. HOOKER and Staff escorted him, his son and miniature aid riding ahead. The cortége reached the review ground, not far from Belle Plain, soon after noon, when the General and President proceeded to review the division of the corps in order. The weather was mild and balmy, and the affair passed off with much éclat and enthusiasm.

Return of the President to Washington—Visit of Foreign Officers—Arrival of Paymasters.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

HEADQUARTERS, ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, Saturday, April 11, 1863.

The President, on Friday, had his last review of troops, and taking the cars at Brooke Station, proceeded by special train and boat to Washington. Nothing of interest different from what transpired on previous days, occurred at the final review. While passing through Gen. SICKLES' camp, on Friday, the President and Gen. HOOKER were most heartily cheered by the men off duty.

Yesterday two Generals of the Swiss service, with unpronounceable names, visited this camp, and were received with the honors due to their rank. In the afternoon Gen. BUTTERFIELD let them see a specimen of our troops by having a division reviewed, and also visited several of the camps. The visiting officers were much pleased with all they saw.

Several Paymasters have arrived, armed with "greenbacks," whereat the troops rejoice much, as well they may, for some of them have seen no money for a long time. All required now to make this army complete in every respect is the payment of all the troops. They can then fight and endure the hardships of a soldier's life without a murmur.

There appears to be no change of the rebel lines across the river, only that every day they make more or less display of force. A few weeks ago they seemed to desire to conceal what force they had. Now the orde r is reversed. I shall not attempt to interpret the meaning of this change. P.

NEWS FROM PORT ROYAL.

All the Monitors at Port Royal, Undergoing Repairs.

Talk of Sending Them to the Mississippi.

The steamship Cahawba, Capt BAKER, arrived at this port yesterday, with intelligence from Port Royal to the 15th inst.

Among the passengers by the Cahawba were Capt. WORDEN of the Montauk, and Capt. KNORRING, late of Gen. HUNTER'S Staff, both of whom were present at the conflict in Charleston harbor.

An important statement is made in regard to the attack on Charleston and the withdrawal of our iron-clads, namely, that the order directing the attack was countermanded from Washington, the countermand not reaching the Admiral until too late to prevent the assault. It is said that it was partly in obedience to this last order that Admiral DUPONT decided not to renew the attack. The hasty departure of the Flambeau for the North, with dispatches, on the 8th, is referred to as a partial confirmation of this report.

Through the report was current at Port Royal when the Cahawba sailed, that the Monitors were to proceed to New-Orleans, it was not credited in well-informed circles.

The news as to operations against Charleston is to the effect that though the design of returning to the assault has been abandoned for the present by the Admiral, there is good reason to believe that Gen. HUNTER has not relinquished the idea of early offensive movements against the city, and that efforts are already making by him in that behalf. The Monitors could be made ready for action in a short time, and would be as efficient as before the late engagement.

The Ironsides still lies off Charleston bar, where she will remain to prevent the rebel iron-clads from raising the blockade, should they make the attempt.

DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF.

A Talk with a Planter—Quarantine Regulation.

From Our Own Correspondent.

NEW-ORLEANS, Thursday, April 2.

A few evenings since I had the pleasure of spending an evening with an old personal friend, an influential planter, residing some —— miles from New-Orleans. He is one of the noble representatives of what was once the true Southerner. Throughout this rebellion he has from necessity remained silent, but his heart has been with the Union, and his secret aspirations have been that the National Government would speedily crush out this rebellion. From this gentleman I learned many facts concerning the internal life of the Confederacy that are of deep interest. The Government is an unalloyed military despotism. There is not a redeeming ray of light from this fearful darkness. All the gallant, hopeful and enthusiastic, all the best blood of the country, have been absorbed into the army, and have either been destroyed or broken down in health and spirits. Every family is in mourning. Not a mother who had a son has escaped the fearful sacrifice, and now the relentless conscription is taking the infirm, the worthless and the old men, and sweeping them into one common grave. Hundreds of men, young and middle-aged, who were dismissed from the armies in Virginia and Tennessee, on medical certificates stating that they were unfit for military duty, have been compelled to report their names for active service, and in some of these instances the parties have died from the fatigue of the first march. Authentic cases were given me where conscripts, suspected of Union proclivities, were hunted by deer-hounds. I was informed that many men, originally enthusiastic for the Confederacy, now admit that if their hopes were realized there would be nothing gained but ruin. It seems that at the time of the passage of the rebel conscription law, the State of Mississippi was on the eve of rebellion, and hence the sudden visit of Gen. J. JOHNSTON and JEFF. DAVIS to Jackson. On that occasion DAVIS made a speech before a joint session of the Legislature, in which speech, for two hours, he sophistically defended the law, but warming up toward the close of his remarks, he said, that if the Independence of the South were at once gained, it would always be necessary for the Southern States to keep a standing army of at least two hundred thousand men, and that the people could not expect, under the most favorable circumstances, the blessings of peace for many years; for he admitted that it would be a long time before border warfare would cease, and while such a state of things were possible, nothing but a military Government would meet the exigencies of the case.

These admissions cast a gloom over the thoughtful who heard them, and have been repeated from mouth to mouth, and reflected upon by the few men left at their homes and plantations, and the prospect, indeed, seems hopeless. Their sons gone, their property dissipated, and the future opening upon them a despotism that will possess all the evils of the worst, with none of the ameliorations which naturally grow up with time, and shed around the most irresponsible Government, if of long standing, some protection for the weak, and some refuge for the helpless. I also learned that in spite of the orders from Richmond about limiting the amount of cotton to be planted, the work is going on where it can be done of putting in the largest possible crops, the husbandman indulging the hope that before it is ready to be gathered the protection of the National flag will be over it, and that they can realize some of the rewards of peace. This cotton planting on a large scale, I am assured, is universal, away from the immediate vicinity of the police of large bodies of troops, and the fact is one of grave significance.

My informant urges with great pertinacity that the delays of the National troops are working terrible effects on the enemy. He says if not another gun is fired in Mississippi—if only the National troops will cut off supplies from Texas—time and starvation will do the rest of the work. The Confederacy, he says, has reached its highest point of power and enthusiasm, and that henceforth, though a day may not mark a decline, yet the aggregate days of every month will show them weak and develop weakness. The pride of the land and the flower of the Southern population are exhausted; their wealth is rapidly passing away; hereafter the conscripts are to be composed of inferior and unwilling materials—reluctant people, who will, when it can be done with safety, clamor for peace. Among the leaders, protected by the home comforts and the luxuries of Richmond, there has been but little destitution. These conspirators have been chary of their lives, as reckless as they have been of others; but, sooner or later, an outraged people will begin to question their prerogatives, and, once discussion is admitted, the whole fabric of the rebellion will fall into ruins. I believe this is to be the solution, and the experience of a long life in the South has never brought me to any other conclusion.

The Quarantine regulations for this port have been prospectively put in force, for it will be noticed, from a proclamation by Gov. SHEPLEY, that on and after the 1st of May next the following places are declared infected ports, and all vessels arriving from them will be detained at Quarantine not less than ten days: Havana, Matanzas, Trinidad, Cardenas and St. Jago—all on the Island of Cuba; Kingston, Port Royal and Montego Bay, on the Island of Jamaica; Jacmel and Port-au-Prince, on the Island of St. Domingo; the Islands of St. Thomas, Martinique and Guadaloupe; Campeachy, in Yucatan; Belize, in Honduras; Vera Cruz, Alvarado, Tampico and Tuspan, in Mexico; San Juan de Nicaragua, Chagres, Aspinwall and Porto Bello, in Central America; Maracaibo, in Venezuela; Laguayra, Island of Trinidad, Rio de Janeiro, Para and Cayenne, in South America, and Galveston, Matamoras and Key West.

Alluding incidentally to the yellow fever, puts me especially in mind of the circumstance that a gentleman of high standing in this city, who returned from the North viâ Havana in the Columbia, stated to me that while in Havana his personal liberty was seriously threatened because he uttered some commonplace remarks in favor of the Union. So strong, indeed, was the feeling, that he was told to get on board of his ship as soon as possible to avoid getting into trouble. I learn from passengers by the Roanoke that a party of twelve United States officers went to the Globe Hotel for the purpose of getting a lunch. The waiters were as insolent as they dared to be, and very reluctantly set before these officers some stale claret which could not be drank, the remark being made that it was good enough for Federal officers. The matter ended by the hotel keeper charging $52 for this gratuitous insult. I should judge from this that PIERRE SOULE and others occupy their time industriously in moulding the public sentiment against the people of the United States.

The 1st of April should be memorable, as it witnessed the opening of the Federal Court, the first one organized in the rebel States since the rebellion. My opinion is that the whole matter of a United States Grand Jury is premature. There is but little more chance that a case would now be properly tried, so far as the United States Court is concerned, than if the City was in the hands of Gen. LOVELL. There is no use denying the fact, that the people are not prepared for the exercise of the high power, the trial by jury, before a United States Court. The greater part of the State is still in the possession of the rebels, and from causes which I have hinted at, this city is hourly growing more and more openly disloyal, and the proper sentiment does not and cannot exist until the whole State is restored to the Union, and the prospect of the possible return here of the Confederate authorities made perfectly hopeless. So long as this is not the case the United States Court, the trial by jury and the absence of every other power except the strong arm of the military, is simply in my opinion impracticable and worse than useless. Still, even the form of opening a United States Court in one of the once rebel States is a point in history. The occasion was certainly one of profound interest—the chance to make a charge to a jury under the peculiar circumstances was a rare opportunity to illustrate the power and purposes of the National Government. The people in the city, rebel and loyal, felt it to be so, and the large Court-room was, at an early hour, crowded to excess. I examined the faces of the jurors, some few of which belonged to well-known war men. The whole of them, as a body, would have done justice to a civil suit; but the majority, I believe, neither felt nor could understand, just at this time—owing to the stultification growing out of the events of the last two years—the relations of the United States Government toward them, the State in which they lived, or the country to which they owed allegiance. Much surprise was naturally expressed that the Judge did not elaborately charge as to the crime of treason against the United States, but I suppose that was overlooked, as not being as important as "betting on elections" or the "school fund." The following passages occur in the charge:

GENTLEMEN OF THE GRAND JURY. The laws of the State of Louisiana, passed in wisdom, and with an enlightened appreciation of the interests and rights of the public and of individuals, will be your guide and the light to your path. These laws will indicate what acts are inconsistent with the best interests of the community for which they were intended, and the nature and grade of offences against the rules they prescribe. There will be exceptions to the applicability of them, growing out of the peculiar position of affairs here at the present time, and these exceptions will frequently occur. A large part of the offences usually inquired into by the Grand Juries are now disposed of without the formality or ceremony of that investigation. Indeed, all the criminal justice of this city and this part of the State has been administered, from the time of the occupation by the Federal forces almost to the present time, in the Provost Court of this Department, and it is not expedient to remove from that Court, or to take cognizance in this of offences, except those of the gravest importance to the public welfare, such as against human life, and some few of the most serious character against persons and the rights of property. The others can much better continue to be treated as they have heretofore been in that Court, and will therefore not be presented for your consideration. There are several classes of acts which the laws of the State designate as particularly worthy of the consideration of Grand Juries, and have heretofore charged the Courts with the duty of calling carefully to their attention. A reference to the subjects of them will perhaps aid you, viz.: Betting on elections; sale of liquors—important; school fund; creating discontent among slaves; carrying concealed weapons; roads. Offences against laws of the United States you will also inquire into, and present persons guilty of acts prohibited by those laws. The application of all laws as rules of conduct here is modified by the conditions of public matters here now, and this condition you will have to take into account. The orders and proclamations of the President of the United States, and those of the Departments of the Government at Washington, and the orders and proclamations of the Commanding General in the Department, are all of them valid and effectual as laws, and are laws to us. Their effect as modifying the laws and rules by which you would otherwise be guided must not be overlooked, but must be observed and deferred to, and their requirements must in all respects be conformed to. You will be careful not to present any insufficient or frivolous evidence. Nor, on the other hand, will you omit to present any against whom the evidence is sufficient to warrant presentation. The general rule on this subject is, the evidence to warrant presentation should be sufficient, if unconditional and unexplained, to warrant a conviction on trial. With care not to oppress the innocent or excuse the guilty, you will enter carefully, and faithfully, and earnestly upon your investigations.

AFFAIRS IN NASSAU.

Wreck of the Marion—Loss of the Cardoff—The Pirate Retribution in a New Character—Important Capture by the Tuscarora.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

NASSAU, N. P., Monday, April 13, 1863.

The steamship Marion was wrecked, on the 2d inst., on a sunken rock off Water Cay, and near the Double-head Shot Cay. She was worked off the rock soon after she struck, and was found to leak so badly that the captain was compelled to run her ashore. She had a full cargo and about fifty passengers for New-Orleans. A large portion of her cargo will be saved in a damaged state. A portion of her passengers have gone to Cardenas; the rest are still at Water Cay, waiting for a schooner which was sent from here last Saturday to take them to Havana.

The ship Haidee, from Cardiff, bound to this port with coal for the rebels, ran ashore on Porkfish rocks, about two miles from this town, on Friday last. She is a total loss.

The pirate Retribution, a bogus sale of which I informed you in my last, was made to ADDERLEY'S brother-in-law, has been repaired and cleared for Baltimore, with salt. It is well known, however, that she has gone to Spanish Wells, about sixty miles from here, to mount her guns. I understand she is to be called the Etta. She would be an easy prize to any one of our gunboats, as she is an old schooner, and not fast.

The steamer Margaret and Jessie, (formerly the Douglass,) arrived here from Charleston last Saturday, bringing the news of an attack on the fortifications in Charleston harbor. For a wonder the Charleston papers don't claim a victory.

Capt. WM. ROSS POSTELLE, of whom I wrote you in my last, arrived here this morning from Havana. His vessel was captured off Abaco the morning after he left here. His cargo cost him about $30,000 here. There were five other vessels captured at the same time by the Tuscarora. The weather is fine and the island entirely free from fever. UNION.

THE FOOD QUESTION.

THE PLAN OF THE SECRETARY OF WAR FOR SUPPLYING THE ARMIES.

The following is the plan of the rebel Secretary of War for supplying the Confederate armies with food, to which JEFF. DAVIS made allusion in his recent address:

1. Let the people in each county, parish, or ward, select at a public meeting, as early as convenient, a Committee of three or more discreet citizens, charged with the duties hereinafter mentioned.

2. Let it be the duty of the Committee to ascertain from each citizen in the county or parish what amount of surplus corn and meat, whether bacon, pork, or beef, he can spare for the use of the army, after reserving a supply for his family and those dependent on him for food.

Let this Committee fix a price which is deemed by them a just compensation for the articles furnished, and inform the citizens what this price is, so that each may know, before delivery, what price is to be paid for the articles furnished.

Let this Committee make arrangements for the transportation of the supplies to some convenient depot, after consultation with the officer who is to receive them.

Let the Committee make delivery of the supplies on receiving payment of the price, and assume the duty of paying it over to the citizens who have furnished the supplies.

3. Where the duty of the Committee is performed in any town or city at which there may be a quartermaster or commissary, no further duty need be required of them than to deliver to the officer a list of the names of the citizens and of the supplies which each is ready to furnish, and the price fixed; whereupon the officer will himself gather the supplies and make payment.

4. Where the supplies are furnished in the country the cost of transportation to the depot will be paid by the Government, in addition to the price fixed by the Committee.

5. As this appeal is made to the people for the benefit of our brave defenders now in the army, the Department relies with confidence on the patriotism of the people that no more than just compensation would be fixed by the Committee, nor accepted by those whose chief motive will be to aid their country, and not to make undue gains out of the needs of our noble soldiers.

JAMES A. SEDDON, Secretary of War.

THE CRY FOR BREAD.

From the Richmond Sentinel 7th.

When the public peace was for a time somewhat disturbed here on Thursday last, it was suggested to us, and to the rest of the city Press, by many citizens, to refrain from any present notice of it, on account of the misrepresentations and exaggerations to which a publication would give rise. In assenting to the suggestion, in company with all the other papers, we felt that we were only paying a decent respect to the opinions of gentlemen certainly as well qualified to judge as ourselves, equally interested, to say the least, in a correct judgment, and entitled to deference on other grounds.

It can now be said upon authority of the sworn evidence, that the conduct of the few misguided women who, on Thursday, availed themselves of the tenderness with which their sex is ever treated in the South, was not due to suffering. Themselves and the thieves in pantaloons who took shelter in their company, simply plundered; milliner's goods, dry goods, fancy goods, &c., fully as much as more necessary articles. It was no cry for bread. It was no hunger riot; so far as they placed their action on any declared basis, it was opposition to the high prices. And upon this point they took shelter under the distract sympathy of such as believe that speculators and extortioners have made the prices so high and dispose them accordingly. But it is now proven that there was no distress among those persons; that the very leader was independent, and herself an extortioner; that there has been abundant provision made for the poor who may need it; and that the whole thing was simply a plundering raid, under female impunity. An ebullition such as we have noticed would have excited no attention outside of the quiet South, where good order is so uniform and so universal. It amounts to nothing here.

From the Richmond Whig, April 8.

Rev. W. H. FOURDEN, pastor of Belvidere Hill Baptist Church, publishes an explanation in regard to the riotous assemblage of women which, last week, disturbed our city. The meeting of females having been organized at that church, on Oregon Hill, Mr. FOURDEN says the women first tried to get the Methodist Meeting-house on Oregon Hill to hold their meeting in, but the sexton refused to allow them to hold it there.

The women then applied to the person having the key of the Belvidere Church, and, in his absence from home, it was given them without it being known for what object the meeting was called. The whole story will get into print if they keep on. It now appears that prior to their marching through the streets they held a meeting at the Baptist Church, and determined to have bread for themselves and little ones or get up a riot and sack the stores and warehouses, which they did, as per statement of Col. STEWART.

BREAD RIOT IN RALEIGH, N. C.

MOBS OF FAMISHED WOMEN HELPING THEMSELVES TO FOOD.

The Raleigh, N. C., Standard of March 25, gives an account of a bread riot that has just taken place near that city. A company of women, most of them soldiers' wives, went to the store of WILLIAM WELSH, at High Point, rolled out several barrels of molasses and divided it. The Standard remarks on this occurrence: "WELSH is a great war man, and favors general impressment of supplies by the army."

The same paper gives particulars of other riots, and referring to them editorially, exclaims: "Bread riots have commenced, and where they will end, God only knows." A letter is copied by the Standard from another North Carolina paper, giving an account of another riotous outbreak of the women at Salisbury, in that State, a place with which some of our soldiers have become acquainted. The letter is dated March 19, and says:

"There was a mob raised here yesterday, consisting mostly of soldiers' wives, and led on by hunger, I suppose, and had bought some flour for his own use. He asked them in and gave them three barrels. Next they said they must have some molasses, and straightway they proceeded to SPRAGUE & BROS., and made their demand known, when SPRAGUE & BROS. gave them all the molasses they had, which was a little over half a barrel. The mob then repaired to the market house, when, it being too late to make out the share of the impressment, they moved it to W. M. BAKER'S, where they are now dividing the spoils among themselves.

AN APPEAL TO CITIZEENS TO RAISE FOOD.

The Legislature of Virginia, just prior to its late adjournment, adopted the following preamble and resolution:

"The General Assembly of Virginia, moved by a deep sense of the importance, at this time, of raising, above all things, an abundance of provisions and of forage for the uses of our armies and the people at large, confident in our ample resources of production, as well as in the public spirit and patriotic zeal of our citizens, and fearing no deficiency or serious inconvenience, beyond what at all times may occur from unfavorable seasons, except such as might result from over-confidence in these resources, or from not sufficiently adverting to the large space of her territory temporarily disabled from furnishing its usual contribution to the public wants, and to other considerable portions of the Confederacy cut off for the present from their usual sources of supply; but still deeming it their highest duty to guard, as far as possible, against even the chance of so great a calamity as a scarcity of provisions, do, therefore,

Resolve, 1. That they earnestly recommend to every citizen of the State, that he shall aim to increase, greatly beyond his usual amount, all his agricultural products of every kind whatever: his grain and his grass crops; his live stock; his fruits and his garden vegetables; everything, indeed, that goes to the sustenance of man and beast, before he shall apply his labor to any other object or employment whatever—that to constantly practice frugality in using his resources of food, and bear in mind always to consume first what is most perishable, in order that he may husband his whole stock to the best advantage; and they enjoin it upon, and make it the special charge of every Justice of the Peace throughout all the State not occupied by the enemy, to visit his neighbors, and urge it upon them to act promptly and effectively on his recommendation, as a work of such necessity is a sacred duty in the cause of the independence and safety of the Southern States, and as furnishing to the world the evidences of their firm and immovable determination to incur every sacrifice, and to omit no effort that may be necessary to the success of that holy cause."

"Failing to overrun us by superior numbers, disappointed in taking us for want of arms and ammunition, vexed to see us find comfortable clothing for our soldiers in the face of great difficulties, the enemy have one hope left, and we one danger, and but one. The brave and chivalrous beings are exulting over the hope of subduing us, not by prowess in arms—they have abandoned that expectation, notwithstanding their superior numbers and superior equipments—but they are listening to hear our little children cry for bread, and even the faintest wail would be music to their ears! They are trusting to see gaunt famine unstring the nerves of men before whose inferior numbers they cower in the field. This is their final hope. What a depth of humiliation and disgrace, what an agony of rage, what a hopelessness of defeat does it acknowledge!

Fellow-citizens, their "final hope" is but despair, if we do our duty. God has given us one of the most fruitful heritages on which the sun smiles from the heavens. We have but to plant and sow, and dig and plow; but to plant corn and potatoes, and oats and peas, and beans; but to raise beef, and pork and poultry, and all will be well. Our land is a Goshen, if we do but stir the soil. Oh, it would be an agony and a disgrace eternal and overwhelming, if, in such an hour as this, we neglect such a duty and turn aside to cotton and tobacco! We have passed safely through all the shoals and rocks of the stormy sea of Independence, and all its narrow straits; all but one, and that lies just beyond!

We are in our last peril now—easily and surely surmounted, if we fail not in our duty. "Plant, sow, dig, plow,"—these are the watchwords that will save us. If the accursed love of gain should lead one Confederate to plant cotton instead of corn, and tobacco instead of potatoes, the Yankees, who are eagerly looking on for the success of their last hope, will clap their hands with joy at every new hill that he thus perverts from patriotic purposes. They will hail him as planting for LINCOLN instead of his country, and they will hail him truly!"

AN ADDRESS FROM GOV. VANCE.

GOV. VANCE, in an address just issued to the people of North Carolina, speaks as follows:

"The bright sunshine again warms and dries the earth. We must take advantage of it to our salvation, or neglect it to our destruction.

Plant, sow, dig and plow—corn, oats, potatoes—anything and everything which will support life. Let everybody take fields, where the plow, not the maddening wheel of artillery, furrows the generous soil. These will prove real fields of victory and independence.

Hundreds of able bodied young men in our towns and villages, non-producers, who, having procured substitutes or exemptions, are now idling their time about empty stores or other unprofitable places, should be growing something, and adding to, instead of diminishing the general fund. Let none be idle, and, above all, my countrymen, let none plant cotton or tobacco. Though the prices are high and the temptations great, your profits would be made from the blood of brave men, and the sufferings of helpless women and children. Your children and your children's children would reap an abundant and enduring harvest of scorn, and the remembrance of the manner in which your wealth was gained would burn into your consciences to the hour of your death."

THE DANGER OF GENERAL STARVATION.

From the Savannah News.

The Yankees have arrayed against us powerful armies, under the lead of Gens. HOOKER, HUNTER, BANKS, FOSTER, STOEL, ROSECRANS and the beast. But we are threatened by a more formidable general, general starvation. Our farmers, every man, woman and child that can wield a hoe can meet the latter in the field. If they will drive him from our midst, our brave soldiers will vanquish the others.

Again it says:

"If we have a drouth this season, and such a thing is probable, how can the South feed the Northern and Southern armies and her own people? If they succeed in cutting off the supply of beef from Texas, and destroy the crops and demoralize the slaves as far as their armies extend their operations, what will be the condition of the South another Winter, if the planters and cultivators of the soil inside of the Confederate lines do not apply their entire energies and labor to the raising of breadstuffs and provisions?

We learn that in some parts of Texas and Louisiana cotton planters, carried away with the hope of selling their cotton after the war for 50 or 75 cents per pound, are making arrangements to make all the cotton they possibly can, and are paying but little attention to corn. If such a spirit should prevail extensively, the South will yet see such suffering as she has never yet seen before. We may as well look these facts fairly in the face. The war is not yet over. We are not entirely safe. The vigilance, diabolical hate and desperation of the enemy may yet ruin the South, if our planters, as well as our Generals, and soldiers, and statesmen, do not do their duty."

An order from Gen. SIBLEY, appoints officers to carry out Order No. 223, to suppress the distilling of rum, on account of the want of barrels for the military service. The order which is to be carried out is as follows:

SPECIAL ORDER NO. 223.—Representations having been made to the Commanding-General by the agent of the Government employed at the Salt Island, procuring salt under the instructions from Major W. B. BLAIR, Chief Commissary Trans-Mississippi Department, of the difficulty existing in carrying out their instructions, on account of the monopoly of barrels by the manufacturers of rum, and the consequently exorbitant prices, not only of barrels absolutely essential for military purposes, but the destruction and injurious consumption of molasses—

The Commanding General can see no other remedy than to direct the impressment of all empty barrels for the use of the Government, and to suppress, temporarily, the distillery of rum in the District on and and after the 10th of March. Officers of the Quartermaster's Department, and agents of the Government, are accordingly authorized and enjoined to carry this order into rigid execution, and they will, if necessary, call upon the nearest troops to enforce the same.

By order of Brig.-Gen. H. H. SIBLEY.
TOM P. OCHILTREE, A. A. Gen.

A bill to prohibit distilleries has been passed in the lower house of the Texas Legislature, by a vote of 52 to 13.

REBEL REPORTS FROM CHARLESTON.

From the Charleston Mercury, 8th.

At last the long period of doubt and delay is at an end, and this goodly city, girdled with the fiery circle of its batteries, stands confronted with the most formidable Armada that the hands of men have ever put afloat.

The first scene in the novel drama of the war, which, we trust, is to add new lustre to the fame of Charleston, has closed. Let us render thanks to the Lord of Hosts that the result, thus far, has been one of proud triumph to our country. As yet, however, we have but entered upon the ordeal. It will be for the next few days to tell the tale of our sad disaster, or complete success.

At two o'clock on Tuesday afternoon, a dispatch from Fort Sumter announced that these ten vessels had crossed the bar, and were cautiously steaming inward—the foremost one having at that time reached a point about three thousand yards from the Fort. The next news was brought to us an hour later, by the dull detonation of the first gun from Fort Moultrie, which was immediately answered by a heavy report and a cloud of white smoke from the turret of one of the Monitors. At ten minutes after three, the enemy having come within range, Fort Sumter opened her batteries, and almost simultaneously the white smoke could be seen puffing from the low sand hills of Morris and Sullivan's Islands, indicating that the Beauregard Battery on the left, and Battery Wagner on the extreme right, had become engaged. Five of the iron-clads, forming in line of battle in front of Fort Sumter, maintained a very rapid return fire, occasionally hurling their 15-inch shot and shell against Fort-Moultrie and the minor batteries, but all directing their chief efforts against the east face of Fort Sumter. Gradually, but visibly, the distance between the attacking vessels and the fort was lessened, and as the enemy drew nearer the firing became hot and almost continuous.

About 4½ o'clock the battle became fierce and general. The scene at that hour, as viewed from the Battery promenade, was truly grand. Battery Bee had now mingled the hoarse thunder of its guns in the universal din, and the whole expanse of the harbor entrance, from Sullivan's Island to Cummings' Point, became enveloped in the smoke and constant flashes of the conflict. The iron-clads kept constantly shifting their position, but, whichever way they went, their ports, always turned toward the battlements of Sumter, poured forth their terrible projectiles against the walls of that famous stronghold. Ever and anon as the huge shot went ricochetting toward the mark, the water was dashed up in vast sheets of spray, towering far above the parapet of the fort, while the wreaths of smoke constantly ascending from the barbette guns showed how actively the artillerymen of the post were discharging their duties. In the foreground our own staunch little iron-clads, the Palmetto State and Chicora, could be seen steaming energetically up and down their chosen fighting position, evidently impatient to participate in the fray.

Up to this time the frigate Ironsides had borne a very conspicuous part in the fight. Her long hull lay at the distance, apparently, of a mile from our batteries, and her tremendous broadsides were more than once fitly answered by broadsides from the fort. It soon became apparent that she was unable to stand the severe fire directed against her. Steaming rapidly southward, she gave Fort Sumter a few parting shots and withdrew from the action. The Keokuk, a double-turreted Monitor, soon followed her example, and before 5 o'clock the fire had evidently began to slacken. The remaining Monitors, however, still kept up the bombardment, and our forts and batteries replied with undiminished alacrity. At 5½ P. M. the the Monitors began to retire, and at half-past five the enemy fired the last shot of the engagement.

Gratifying as were the general results of the fight, the late hour at which it closed precluded the possibility of our receiving the full details from the forts. A dispatch from Fort Sumter informs us that the Ironsides and Keokuk were both very roughly handled, and retired seriously injured. The Keokuk had her flag shot down, her boat shot away, three holes in her smoke stack, and a portion of her bow shot off. The practice of our gunners was most creditable. Nearly every shot struck some one of the iron-clads, but with what effect is not known. Fort Sumter was struck thirty-four times. One of our guns was dismounted, but otherwise the fort is in good condition. Fort Moultrie was uninjured. The casualties at Fort Sumter were a drummer boy named ARRENS, mortally wounded, two men severely wounded, and three others slightly injured. At Fort Moultrie one man was accidentally hurt by a fall from the flag-staff, on which he was replacing our flag, which had been shot away. We learn that he afterward died. Two small houses on the back beach of Sullivan's Island were demolished by the enemy's fire.

After their withdrawal from the action, the enemy's iron-clads anchored off Morris Island, where they now lie. Many think that the fight will be renewed at daybreak this morning; but up to the time at which we write (3 A. M.) all is quiet. The reports we get from the Stono River say that the enemy's transports still remain in the stream. Doubtless the Yankee Generals intend, before venturing upon a land attack, to await the issue of the struggle between their ships and our batteries.

GEN. BEAUREGARD'S CONGRATULATIONS.
HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF SOUTH CAROLINA, GEORGIA AND FLORIDA, CHARLESTON, S. C., April 10.

GENERAL ORDERS NO. 55.—The Commanding General is gratified to have to announce to the troops the following joint resolutions unanimously adopted by the Legislature of the State of South Carolina:

Resolved, That the General Assembly reposes unbounded confidence in the ability and skill of the commanding General of this Department, and the courage and patriotism of his brave soldiers, with the blessing of God, to defend our beloved city and to beat back our vindictive foes.

Resolved, That his Excellency the Governor be instructed to communicate this resolution to Gen. BEAUREGARD.

Soldiers! the eyes of your countrymen are now turned upon you, on the eve of the second anniversary of the 13th of April, 1861, when the sovereignty of the State of South Carolina was triumphantly vindicated within the harbor which we are now to defend. The happy issue of the action on the 7th inst.—the stranded, riddled wreck of the iron-mailed Keokuk—her baffled coadjutors forced to retire beyond the range of our guns, have inspired confidence in the country that our ultimate success will be complete. An inestimably precious charge has been committed to your keeping, with every reliance on your manhood and enduring patriotism. By command of Gen. BEAUREGARD.

THOMAS JORDAN, Chief of Staff.
Official. JOHN M. OTEY, A. A. G.

"THE COMBAT DEEPENS."

The Enquirer concludes a long leader under this caption, as follows:

"The alternative then is before us; and the decision is near; we are either to be a victorious and famous people, a support to our friends and a terror to our enemies; or else—may God be between us and harm!—an oppressed nationality, one of the mendicant peoples of the earth, hawking about our grievances and sores, to the digust of mankind, and invoking execration (in vain) against our masters and owners, the Yankees! In vain, for nobody needs an 'oppressed nationality;' its grievances are a bore; its words are not believed; success has the ear of the world, and tells its own story, and its victim's too—our portion through all time will be not only beggery, but contempt.

This is the truth. Would that every man at the South this day laid it to heart! Surely there would not be a straggler from his post; not an officer, on pretence of duty or health, strutting idle in our streets. It will be no credit hereafter to boast of having been in all the 'battles of the war,' from Manassas to Murfreesboro. That was child's play—the battle of the war is to come, this month, or next month, or is now raging along the whole line. Pity the mother whose son will not be in that melee, and yet live to tell it!"

THE REBELS IN KENTUCKY.

THE BATTLE OF SOMERSET.

From the Richmond Dispatch, April 14.

The information which reaches us from the Southwest is highly encouraging as to our prospects in Kentucky. The Yankee account of the defeat of Gen. PEGRAM, as all their accounts are, was highly exaggerated, if, indeed, it had any foundation at all. Gen. PEGRAM first engaged the enemy at Danville, defeating him without any material resistance, and succeeded in securing in that section about 900 head of beef cattle. With these he commenced falling back out of the State, knowing that the enemy were in large force in the neighborhood, and if energetic might intercept his movements, and overwhelm him with numbers. On reaching the Cumberland River he found that stream so much swollen as to be well nigh impassable for his cattle, as well as the gallant men under his command. Whilst waiting to cross he was attacked by the enemy in largely superior force, with whom he contended for a day and a half, and finally succeeded in crossing his little army, and 550 of the cattle he had captured at Danville. His loss in men in this engagement—killed, wounded and missing—did not exceed 150. The loss of the enemy in killed alone was greater than this number. He accomplished the purpose for which he was sent into the State by Gen. JOHNSTON, and with much less loss than might have been expected under the circumstances.

On the 30th of March Col. CLUKE, of Gen. JOHN MORGAN'S command, attacked the enemy at Mount Sterling. Their pickets were soon driven in, and their whole force took refuge in the houses of the town, from which they opened fire on our men. Col. CLUKE, in order to dislodge them—being without artillery—found it necessary to fire one or two buildings, which communicated to others, until a whole square was consumed. The enemy, to the number of three hundred, finding further resistance useless, surrendered unconditionally. Col. C. then retired with his prisoners, intending to join the command of Gen. PEGRAM, at Camp Dick Robinson. At MCCORMICK'S, twenty-one miles south of Mount Sterling, he was reinforced by Gen. MARSHALL, when he changed his course, and went back to the latter place, of which he held possession at last accounts.

AFFAIRS IN TENNESSEE.

Correspondence of the Mobile Register.

CHATTANOOGA, Thursday, April 2, 1863.

By this evening's train from War Trace, 700 prisoners and 30 officers, captured by Gen. FORREST at Brentwood, arrived en route for Richmond. They consisted of 500 men of the Twenty-second Wisconsin Volunteers, commanded by Lieut.-Col. BLOODGOOD, and 200 of the Nineteenth Michigan, under Capt. BASSETT. The rest of the officers and men of these two regiments were captured by Gen. VAN DORN, some weeks since, at Thompson's Station. This is the second visit of Lieut.-Col. BLOODGOOD to Chattanooga, his regiment having been under Gen. NEAGLY'S command at the bombardment of Chattanooga on the 7th June, 1862.

At daylight, yesterday, two of the enemy's gunboats came up the Tennessee River to Tuscumbia, where they were met by our horse marines, (cavalry,) and a body of sharpshooters. The enemy, it seems, commenced a heavy cannonading, but were soon driven from the guns by our boys' rifles, and were forced to return with considerable loss. This confirms my opinion that the enemy intends making a demonstration on North Alabama, with a view of effecting a junction with ROSECRANS' army, and the gunboats came up most probably to feel their way and ascertain our strength.

MISSISSIPPI.

GRENADA, April 6, 1863.

Lieut. BOGAN, of the Twenty-first Mississppi, has just arrived. He says the militia, under Maj. LIDDELL, yesterday, at eight o'clock A. M., fired on the Yankees on a transport going down, just below Pecan point.

All fell who were on deck except three men, he thinks; and it was believed twenty or thirty were killed and wounded, as the fire was from an ambush within less than thirty yards.

The pilot was not hurt, consequently the boat escaped. One man was wounded on our side.

CHARLES D. FOYTAINE, Commanding Post.

SCARCITY OF PAPER.

The Augusta Constitutionalist, of Saturday, April 4, appears on a half sheet. The editor says:

"The destruction of the Bath Paper Mills, from which we derived our supplies of printing paper, may entail on us the necessity of suspending the issue of the Constitutionalist. At this time it seems impossible to obtain paper from any other source. All the paper mills of the Confederacy are now monopolized to their fullest capacity by press engagements. Under these circumstances, we prefer not to receive any more subscriptions. We request all persons contemplating remittances by mail or express, to withhold them, at least until we can announce definitely whether we will be able to continue the issue of this paper. Should we be compelled to suspend, we will resume our publication as soon thereafter as practicable. It is wholly impossible, however, to make any calculation as to when that can be:

These remarks apply equally to the publication of the Southern Field and Fireside.

It would be vain for us to attempt to express the depth of our regret at this great calamity. It is one of those terrible providences to which we must bow, and we feel that our subscribers will do so likewise, without any other sentiment toward us than that of regret at a common misfortune.

Under these circumstances, we will be compelled, for the present, to publish our daily on a half-sheet, and to condense, or perhaps leave out, our contract advertisements."

The Macon Telegraph of April 6 also appears on a half-sheet. The editor says:

"What we have for a long time foreseen and dreaded as inevitable, has come upon us. We are obliged to take to a fragment of a sheet, and even then can only promise that it shall be as large as possible. For the reasons which impel this step we refer the reader to an article copied elsewhere from the Charleston Courier of the 3d inst.; and so stringent are they as to force that old, wealthy and influential sheet to a suspension for a few days. Nothing remains for us and all other Confederate newspapers, but to diminish our consumption to the lowest possible limit consistent with keeping our readers advised of current events; and this must be done by throwing out all standing advertisements, and restricting that branch of our business to the smallest possible limit."

The Charleston Mercury, of April 8, says:

"The price of single copies of the Mercury at the counter of our office will, on and after date, be ten cents.

We can no longer afford to give out any copies gratuitously."

THE NORTHWEST.

"Patrius," writing to the Mobile Register, quotes the following paragraph from the Richmond Enquirer:

"Those weak-minded Confederates who were some time ago looking eagerly to the symptoms of dissatisfaction and 'Peace Democracy' at the Northwest, must be somewhat mortified at present. What has become of our Northwestern friends and sympathizers? Why comes no word of cheer from VALLANDIGHAM? Is RICHARDSON gone dumb? Has the muse of Cox hung her harp upon the buckeyes? Oh! why art thou silent, thou voice of my heart?"

He adds: "I see some extracts from a speech of VALLANDIGHAM in New-York, in which he says that he is not at all disheartened by the hostility of the Richmond Press to an alliance with the Northwest.' Such an affirmative assurance from such a man in such a place, proves the converse to be true on other minds. Oh, brother of the Enquirer! By our bleeding, suffering country; by our prostrate commerce; by our devastated homes; by our desolate firesides; by our maimed brothers; by our sonless mothers; by our weeping widows; by our babes, orphaned while the young lips are just learning the sweet 'papa;' by this wail of woe through all our land, I conjure you pause, pause, ere you write those bitter words, which the fired heart of the South needs not, and which may 'dishearten,' aye, paralyze, those who else—by dividing the North—would most effectually aid us."

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

CHICAGO, Thursday, April 9.

There has been this evening one of the largest and most enthusiastic Union demonstrations ever held in this city. It was a mass meeting called by the resolutions passed by our Common Council and vetoed by the Mayor. These facts, I suppose, gave interest to the occasion, and called out an assemblage much larger than usual. Bryan Hall was filled in every part, and there was a constant stream coming and departing for want of room until a late hour. Judge DRUMMOND, of the United States District Court, presided, and a large number of our most prominent citizens figured as Vice-Presidents.

The principal speeches were made by Senator TRUMBULL, of this State, and Senator HOWARD, of Michigan; Judge DRUMMOND, Hon. JOHN WENTWORTH and Hon. GEORGE C. BATES also addressed the meeting.

The speeches were strong, patriotic utterances, fully up to the spirit of the hour. The interest continued unflagging up to 12 o'clock. This alone speaks of the deep feeling which is abroad in our community on the vital questions connected with the war. The people of the West are in earnest, and no better evidence do we want of it than the meeting held this evening. The favorable returns of the recent elections both at the East and the West served to impart enthusiasm to the occasion.

Such a meeting, occurring on the eve of our municipal election, will impart confidence to the Union men in the result. It was an outpouring of the staunch men of the city—those who have an interest in its welfare beyond and above that contained in mere party politics—men who see nothing but ruin and disgrace in the schemes and devices of the "Copperheads."

Senator TRUMBULL, although considered a radical, undoubtedly speaks for the great mass of the loyal men of the State. They have become tired of attempting to conserve Slavery. The progress of the war teaches some valuable lessons, and has the effect to change the opinions of many who deemed themselves immovable. And so they would have been under ordinary circumstances and influences. But "the logic of events" has caused them first to waver, then to reconsider their opinions, and, finally, to abandon them.

Thousands of copies of Gen. BUTLER'S last speech in New-York—reprinted from the report of the TIMES—were distributed to the audience. That speech touches a sympathetic chord in the West, and has created more interest, not to say excitement, than any other delivered since the beginning of the war. It will exert a vast influence everywhere. Gen. BUTLER, better than any other public man, appears to appreciate the rebellion, and his Jacksonian style of dealing with it thrills every Western heart. Nine-tenths of our people to-day would "chair" him to the head of the War Department. It would restore confidence—nay, create confidence, in the speedy crushing out of the rebellion, to place him at the head of the military affairs of the country. Why are such men kept out of active service? is the question the people are asking the country over.

The telegraph will have brought you the results of the local elections in this State. The indications of a healthful change in public sentiment are cheering. Even in the middle and Southern sections of the State, Democratic strongholds have yielded, and undoubted Union men have been elected. Such results are brought about by many of the rank and file refusing to obey the orders of the Copperheads, who have assumed the leadership over them. We have every reason to be satisfied with the voice of the polls in this State this Spring.

In Wisconsin, the election of Justice of the Supreme Court was complicated with the "Farm Mortgage difficulty," and many strong Republican localities voted for the miserable candidate of the democracy, because the mortgagors supposed Judge DIXON to be in favor of the validity of the mortgages. These mortgages, it will be remembered, were extensively given to aid in the construction of railroads, for which stock was taken. In many instances this stock has proved worthless—the roads having been sold on "first mortgages." Under these circumstances, those interested have entered in combinations to prevent foreclosures; even force has been threatened. And this pernicious element has so far entered into the judicial election, that it is feared that the State will be saved from disgrace only by the vote of her soldiers.

UNITED STATES OF COLOMBIA.

Removal of the Capital to Panama—The Panama Railroad—Trouble in the Convention at Rio Negro, &c., &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PANAMA, Monday, April 6, 1863.

The regular British mail steamer from Cartagena arrived at Aspinwall on the 3d inst., with dates from Bogota, the capital, to March 17, and from Rio Negro, in the State of Antioquia—in which latter place the National Convention is in session—to March 13. The whole country is quiet, the Governor of the State of Bolivar, Gen. NIETO, having apparently dropped his intrigues against the Mosquera Government, which he, NIETO, did so much to establish.

The Convention was discussing the articles of the new Constitution. The most important matter, however, before that body, is the project of law to change the capital of the Republic from Bogota to Panama. This appears to be a favorite measure with MOSQUERA, he believing that it will facilitate his plan for the reconstruction of the Republic of Colombia, which you know was composed of the States of Ecuador, New-Granada and Venezuela. It is generally conceded that the people of Ecuador are favorable to this reconstruction, while the Government opposes it. MOSQUERA is now almost in open enmity to that Government, all political intercourse having ceased between this Republic and that; and while it is not probable he will regularly invade Ecuador, it is almost certain that at the proper time he will send a revolutionary party against President MORENO, and Gen. FLORES, material support. In this way he looks for the adhesion of Ecuador to his scheme. As regards Venezuela, that country has been for the last four years engaged in what appears to be an almost interminable war between two or three parties or factions, the two principal being led by Gen. PAEZ and Gen. FALCON. PAEZ is opposed to the Colombia scheme, while FALCON supports it; and through FALCON and his party MOSQUERA looks for the final adhesion of Venezuela.

The Executive authority presented to the Convention a long message or argument in favor of the removal of the capital. It is contended in this document that Bogota is an inappropriate capital, for the reason that it is a city of large population and the centre of the larger populated States, who exercise too much influence upon the legislation of the Government; that Panama is a small, isolated city, and not at all open to such objections. It is also argued that the Exterior Department of the Republic is the principal one, and that Panama is so situated, and has such rapid communication with all parts of Europe and America, that it is the natural site, in respect to foreign intercourse, for the capital. Another argument is, that the charter of the Panama Railroad will expire in 1875, and it will be for the benefit of the country that the capital shall be where the Government can watch the chances to make a good arrangement for the future management of the transit.

Scandal insinuates that Gen. MOSQUERA is a little influenced in this matter by his enmity to the French Chargé at Bogota. This gentleman married a lady of this Republic, and is the possessor of a very large property in and about Bogota, valued at half a million or more of dollars. The removal of the capital will much decrease the value of this property, and, beside, compel the Chargé, in order that he may give it his personal attention, to resign his place at the Court of the Republic.

Gen. IRIARTE, a favorite officer of MOSQUERA, is now in Panama, making arrangements to bring and quarter a Government force here of 500 men, in anticipation of the change of capital. The men are to be the finest in the army, and will be brought from Buenaventura, in Cauca, on the Pacific side.

I make the following extracts from a very interesting letter I have just received from a high source at Rio Negro, bearing upon the Colombian scheme, and showing also the danger that the divisions which agitate the Convention are not unlikely to lead to a renewal of the civil strife, which we all hoped was well over.

"The Convention is divided into two bands of very nearly equal strength. You will understand that I speak of Mosquera men and anti-Mosquera men. Up to this time successful efforts have been made to show a row, but I doubt if this avowed peace can last much longer. I am fearful that in the discussion of the Constitution some irreconcilable differences will occur that will endanger the peace of the country.

On the 4th of March the project of law passed the first reading, by a large majority, to change the Capital of the Republic from Bogota to Panama. Of course I cannot say positively that it will meet with the same success in the other two readings, although the probabilities are in favor of such a result.

The Convention will be nearly unanimous in rejecting the pretentions which the Isthmus urges with so much justice, and the majority even of the delegates from the State of Panama will go with the current. So there is no chance that the Railroad franchise will pass into the hands of the State Government."

The British steamer Solent, which arrived this morning at Aspinwall from St. Thomas, brings the item that the United States gunboat Wachusetts, in the latter part of last month, captured a small British propeller, within a short distance of St. Thomas, called the Dolphin. She was loaded with munitions of war for the Confederates, and was bound for Nassau.

The United States sloop-of-war St. Marys is in port. The gunboat Connecticut, at Aspinwall, will, as usual, convoy the Ocean Queen toward New-York. The United States brig Bainbridge will probably leave for the United States in about twenty days. The material to put her in order for the voyage is daily expected at Aspinwall on the brig Caroline. It was once before sent out to her, but was burned by SEMMES on the Golden Rule.

OUR SAN SALVADOR CORRESPONDENCE

The Battle Between the Forces of Carrera and Barrios—Overwhelming Defeat of the Former.

SAN SALVADOR, Tuesday, March 10, 1863.

The forces of CARRERA attacked the stronghold of the Salvadoreans at Coatepeque on the 22d of February, and, after three days' combat, were completely routed, leaving behind a considerable quantity of small arms and several cannon, which were secured as trophies by the forces of Gen. BARRIOS.

The field selected by the Salvadoreans consisted of a series of heights which commanded the highway, and was strongly fortified; indeed, for any force that could be brought to bear on it from Central America, it was impregnable. The number of killed on the part of the Gautemaleans was considerable—some say eight hundred, although it will probably not exceed one-half that number; while that on the part of the Salvadoreans was small—the killed not exceeding fifty or sixty, and the wounded two hundred and fifty.

From the field-book of CARRERA, which was left behind in the rout, it appears that his force consisted of 6,500 men, while that on the side of BARRIOS was 4,500, so that the whole number engaged on both sides was 11,000. The result shows that so long as Salvador remains true to itself it is competent to resist any force from Gautemala that may be brought against it. This conviction, while it gives confidence to the victors, may prevent a similar attempt on the part of CARRERA.

Instances of individual bravery on both sides were not wanting. Indeed, on the part of the Gautemaleans, the entire charge against so strongly a fortified place may be looked upon as a bold if not reckless one, and the poor fellows whose bones whiten the field in front were deserving of a better fate than to be made the victims of a cruel leader. On the part of the Salvadoreans, the charge of Gen. GONZALES, who left the encampment to attack the opposite forces at the point of the bayonet, was an admirably executed and bold movement, which merits and will receive the commendation of his countrymen.

It is to the honor of Gen. BARRIOS that no means to save the lives of his men which he could devise were left undone. They were well sheltered during the battle, and after it was over his first attention was directed to the care of the wounded. In his first dispatch to his ministers, written on the night of the battle, while rejoicing in the results of the day, he begged them to send with all possible speed such surgeons as they could command, to assist those present in the care of those who had been wounded. Unfortunately, however, neither army had a proper medical department, supplied with the requisite means to render the best aid to the sufferers.

On Sunday, March 1, Gen. BARRIOS, with his victorious army, entered San Salvador, which had been decorated with arches and flowers to receive them. After offering their thanks in the Grand Plaza to the Virgin, under whose auspices they had set out to battle a few days before, they retired to their separate quarters, while the President and his chief officers partook of a banquet which had been provided by the municipality, at which his fellow-citizens had an opportunity to present their congratulations at the success which their arms had achieved.

SAN SALVADOR, Friday, March 27, 1863.

With the battle of Coatepeque has began and apparently terminated the hostilities between Gautemala and Salvador. The questions of difference, if any such exist will now, without doubt, be submitted to that arbitration which Salvador from the beginning desired. Not from any consciousness of weakness, or sense of inability to defend her rights, as the battle of Coatepeque has abundantly demonstrated, but from a real and earnest wish to remain at peace, and to avoid bloodshed, for whatever may be the condition of Gautemala, the true interests of Salvador are best subserved by directing her attention to the development of her agriculture, rather than by expending her substance and wasting the lives of her people in war.

The great staple for exportation from Salvador has heretofore been Indigo, but in a few years without any diminution of the value of this article, coffee will largely take precedence of it, and all other products grown in the State. The coffee produced here is similar in character to that of Costa Rica, which has already taken such a stand in the market as to render any account of it superfluous. The lands adapted to the growth of coffee are comparatively limited, and consequently command a high price. The valley of Santa Tecla, and that of Santa Ana, are at present the best known and most extensively cultivated, but it is probable that hereafter others may be found possessing all the necessary requisites for its culture. Besides an equable climate which has neither of the extremes of heat and cold, it needs a soil both rich and deep, for the free development of its roots. Where the soil is not of sufficient depth, the tree in a few years looks sickly and fails to produce any thing like a remunerative crop, but with these advantages its returns are more ample for the money expended than any other species of agriculture.

In looking at this country one is struck with the abundance of its products and the facility with which they may be obtained. Had it a native population possessing anything like the energy which in the more northern countries has made the inhabitants so prosperous, it would eclipse them all in material wealth; but unfortunately where the means of obtaining the necessaries of life are abundant, the inhabitants are strongly disposed to indolence. How far the introduction of a larger and a more general assortment of merchandise from other countries may stimulate the desire of the laboring population to possess them, and thus add to their adventitious wants, remains to be seen, but from what has already taken place, it is more than probable that such will be the result. In this mode trade, which has ever been the handmaid of industry, may yet stimulate the people to an amount of industry which will largely add to their own pecuniary profits and to the welfare of the country.

There is not a vegetable product of this country that may not find a profitable market either in the Atlantic or Pacific possessions of the United States; and, on the other hand, there is scarcely a manufactured article sent from the workshops of the States that may not meet with a ready sale here. The meagreness of the trade between the two countries can only be accounted for on the ground that but a few years have elapsed since the energetic owners of the Panama Railroad Company opened this region to the commerce of the world. Why a work, almost exclusively the result of American enterprise, should, from the supineness of American merchants, be made to redound to the welfare and increase of trade of European nations rather than that of the United States, is difficult to conceive.

Sunday appears to be the great day for sights and remarkable occasions in this country. A few Sunday mornings since a duel took place at the Quartel between a native officer named MENA and a French one named BISCOVIA. The weapons chosen by MENA were small swords, the spectators the officers of the Quartel, the site the garden of the Quartel, formerly a Franciscan convent, and the hour early sunrise, when buds and blossoms, still wet and fragrant, were glistening in the bright sunlight. A few passes of the swords of the antagonists terminated the affair by the infliction of a wound in the throat of MENA, which caused almost instantaneous death. In this case the party who deserved defeat, by the pertinacity with which he followed up his antagonist, was the vanquished one.

Two or three Sundays after, the President and the victorious army entered the Plaza Major, from the field of Coatepeque, crowned with the wreaths of victory, amid the plaudits of their fellow-citizens.

More recently a High Mass in honor of the victory was celebrated at the cathedral, and last Sunday a review of the army took place in the Plaza de Santa Domingo, at which a young officer, who, from cowardice it is supposed, failed to deliver important dispatches to the President from his Ministers, while the battle was progressing at Coatepeque, was publicly degraded.

Trouble with the Humboldt Indians—Danger to the Mails—Col. Conner and the California Volunteers—Miscellaneous News.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY, Wednesday, March 25, 1863.

A few of the Humboldt Indians are on the rampage. Last week they drove off stock from Skull Valley, a hundred miles westward, nearly all of which, however, was quickly recovered by prompt pursuit. On Sunday, the same Indians, it is supposed, attacked the mail stage from California, near Deep Creek, about two hundred miles westward, shooting and killing the driver, HENRY HARPER, and severely wounding JOHN LIVERTON, a passenger. Judge MOTT, M. C., of Nevada, also a passenger, but fortunately unhurt, making a virtue of necessity, turned coachman pro tem., and brought on the stage safely to the Deep Creek Station. He reached this city yesterday.

On hearing the news, Messrs. COOK and GOODING, of the Overland Mail Company, promptly arranged for the safety and protection of the mail line, so that the same day troops were en route for the scene of difficulty from Ruby Valley, and from this city several stage loads of infantry have been dispatched, to be followed, to-day, by a company of cavalry.

The redskins further attacked Eight Mile Station, killing Messrs. WOOD and MCCARTY, scalping and stripping the bodies, stealing eight horses and burning hay and stabling. Forty horses belonging to Maj. HOWARD EGAN, were also run off from near Deep Creek.

The energetic measures taken will probably prevent any serious interruption of mail or travel. But this Indian outrage westward, and the fact of the robbing of the mail by certain vagabonds a hundred miles or so eastward, suggest a question or two. Were Col. CONNOR and the California Volunteers sent to protect the mail and telegraph, or to keep a sharp eye on the Mormons? If for the latter purpose, the Colonel has chosen a good position, for his headquarters are two or three miles eastward, within the corporate limits of Salt Lake City and upon two small streams—Red Butte and Emigration Creeks—upon which streams a portion of this city relies for drinking water and irrigation. This, of course, furnishes a subject for dissatisfaction. But if the Colonel's position is advantageous, his command is not numerous as "the leaves of yonder forest:" in fact, not numerous enough for effective work with the Mormons, if any be intended, and therefore his stay is little more than needless expense, except to maintain a "hot water" state of affairs, which is about the present state, both with the soldiers and the civilians, and the mail line suffers in the interim.

If the volunteers were sent out to guard the mail and telegraph lines, the bulk of the troops are in decidedly the wrong place. Those lines require very little protection within fifty to one hundred miles of this city. The difficulties are mostly outside of those limits, and the troops should be located at the points handiest to and most accessible from those parts of the route which are most exposed, and most lik

OUR GOVERNMENT APPLYING TO MR. LAIRD.

From the London Times.

An agent of the Northern Government came over here to treat for the construction and equipment of vessels-of-war for the Federal Navy. He obtained plans and estimates, with which he returned to Washington, and from that city he wrote to Mr. LAIRD, proposing that he should build a ship-of-war for the Federal Government, "with guns and everything appertaining." Shortly afterward Mr. LAIRD received another application, from the same quarter, for "two iron-plated steamers," and when he replied that the firm could not accept orders to be completed in so short a time, he was favored with a communication regretting his decision, and trusting that he might still be induced to undertake "one or more of the gunboats." After this we might well leave the case of the Alabama to drop. As far as our merchants are concerned, we know that commerce has no predilections, and that, in point of fact, the dealings of the Federals in our markets have been very much larger than those of the Confederates. Whatever, therefore, may be the opinions prevailing in this country, the Northerners cannot complain, for they have been supplied far more liberally than their opponents, while as to the proceedings of our Government they have been as impartial as possible. Though the Federals had unhesitatingly applied for Alabamas of their own, yet the Confederate Alabama would have been stopped on their representations if our Government had been enabled to act in time. As it happened, the vessel escaped, but those who best know the difficulties attending such matters will be the least disposed to wonder at the event.

THE REBEL WORKS AT VICKTBURGH.

The special Southern correspondent of the London Times has reached Vicksburgh in the course of his journeyings, whence, under date of Feb. 6, he writes a verbose letter. He says:

"Upon the land defences of Vicksburgh an amount of skill and labor has been expended which would gladden the heart of a military engineer. It may be remarked that the natural ruggedness of the hilly country in the neighborhood renders the rear of Vicksburgh unapproachable to an attacking force, save at the cost of stupendous labor in making roads, cutting down trees, and building bridges; but, as an additional protection, lines extending for many miles behind and around the town have been carefully traced, in which every knoll and eminence has been made a point of defence and connected with its neighbor by elaborate rifle-pits. Such a network of redoubts, redans, lunettes, and irregular works, all linked together by covered ways, and forming a system of defensive works which would be impregnable if held by a sufficient force of men, has rarely been seen. The confidence which animates the defenders of the heroic little city is based upon the fact that twice before an insignificant handful of Confederates has repulsed immense bodies of Federal assailants. It would be a satisfaction to an avowed lover of peace if he could witness the slight amount of damage which a feu d'enfer of nearly three months' duration has produced upon Vicksburgh. Day after day, night after night, one flotilla of gunboats above the town, and another, which had ascended from New-Orleans and took its station below, rained shot and shell into the streets; and yet it is difficult to see any traces of the enormous globes of iron with which the air was continually filled. There were many occasions upon which round shot and shell, at the rate of four to a second, were poured into the town, without intermission, for three consecutive hours. Vicksburgh has suffered less than Fredericksburgh, but they both teach the same lesson that we learnt at Sebastopol—that the heaviest artillery fire which it is within the power of man to direct upon an ordinary town is vastly less damaging and dangerous than had previously been imagined. The injury done to Vicksburgh could all be repaired at a cost of $20,000. How many times this amount has been expended upon it by the Federals in 15-inch, 13-inch and smaller shells, in round shot and grape, and spherical, case and shrapnel?"

He explains the escape of the Queen of the West from annihilation when she boldly attacked the ironclad Vicksburgh, under the rebel batteries, by the statement that a 10-inch columbiad, not fifty yards from the spot, had upon its second shot got so far out of gear as to be unavailable at the instant when it was sorely needed.

Polish Affairs.

A PROCLAMATION FROM THE PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT.

The Provisional Government of Poland have issued the following Proclamation:

FELLOW-COUNTRYMEN: The dictatorship of Gen. LANGIEWICZ having ceased on March 19, the chief authority of the country returns again into the hands of the Provisional National Government at Warsaw, who have never left off their governmental duties, and are the only and sole legally constituted authority of the country. Fellow-countrymen, the return of power into the hands of men who have called forth the rising and perseveringly directed it, ought to be a guarantee to you that the movement will continue, and shall not end without victory. Yes, we will fight unswervingly, without being disheartened by ill success, or deterred by obstacles. We will not concentrate the whole cause in one person, whose fall might occasion the fall of the rising; and strong in the confidence of the nation we possess, we will boldly stand forth against all factions who might attempt to create without our consent some new power or authority. Fellow-countrymen, we grasp again with faith and confidence the helm of the nation Government, and, pretty well practiced in devising remedies in cases of emergency, we are confident to be able to avert the danger which threatens us in consequence of the fall of the dictature. Faithful to the cause, whose standard, upheld by us, sets aside every misunderstanding of party, we invoke the whole nation to obedience.

To arms! In the face of our foe, in the face of our falling brethren, the place of every Pole is in the ranks.

By authority of the Central Committee of the Provisional National Government, the Commissioner Extraordinary.

(Signed) STEPHEN BOBROSKI.

LANGIEWICZ.

Correspondence of the London Times.

VIENNA, March 24.

Prince GORTSCHAKOFF has requested Count RECHBERG not to allow LANGIEWICZ to return to Poland before the insurrection is quelled, but not a word has been said about his extradition. The Ex-Dictator is still at Cracow, where he, at his own request, is guarded by sixteen men. LANGIEWICZ believes that the Democratic party wishes to take his life, and his suspicions may perhaps be well founded, as it is currently reported in Galicia that he has brought with him from Poland the sum of 200,000 Polish florins, "which belong to the nation." In a day or two LANGIEWICZ will be removed from Cracow to some place in Moravia, where he will be at liberty on parole. Dr. GISKRA, being a great admirer of the Poles, has proposed to place a well-furnished house in Brünn at the disposal of the Ex-Dictator, but the Government objects to such political demonstration on the part of one of the most distinguished members of the REICHSRATH. CZECHOWSKI'S corps being dissolved, great numbers of the insurgents are now crossing the Galician frontier in the districts of Rzeszow, Przemysl and Zolkiev. On the 24th inst. large bodies of Russian troops marched from Opatovice and Novi Miaslo to Stobnica and Staszov, and on the preceding day the division under Gen. REWUSKI, which is said to consist of 8,000 men, crossed the Bug in pursuit of LELEVEL and LEVANDOWSKI, who have recently obtained some advantages in Lithuania. The Czas professes to think that the dissolution of LANGIEWICZ'S corps will have but little influence on the progress of the insurrection, but Austrian military men say that the insurgents are "dead beat." During the last few days Russian troops have repeatedly violated the Austrian territory, and at Czulice they actually disarmed some Austrian soldiers. One of the latter was killed, and before the body was cold it was stripped of its outer garments and shoes.

GEN. MIROSLAWSKI.

It is rumored the National Committee of Warsaw have in contemplation to name Gen. MIROSLAWSKI Dictator in Poland. An Aid-de-Camp of the General has been in Paris for the last few days, it is said, and his presence there is supposed to be connected in some manner with his nomination. Letters from Warsaw state, however, that MIROSLAWSKI has quite lost favor in Poland

THE PURPOSES OF THE PRUSSIAN GOVERNMENT.

In the Prussian Chamber of Deputies on March 31, a debate took place upon the Convention between Prussia and Russia. At its close, the Polish members then asked what the Government intended to do with the refugees from Russian-Poland who had been sent into the interior.

Count EULENBERG stated in reply that the intentions of the Government were based on clemency in the majority of cases, especially with reference to those persons who had been drawn into the movement against their will. On the other hand, however, the Government was obliged to fulfill the obligations it had contracted with Russia.

Mr. Laird's Statement Refuted.

To the Editors of the Evening Post:

GENTLEMEN: Seeing the statement of Mr. LAIRD in the House of Commons, that propositions had been made to him to build vessels for what he calls the Northern Government, by the Secretary of the Navy, I have made inquiries as to the truth of Mr. LAIRD'S statement in the proper quarter, and am enabled to say that Mr. LAIRD'S statement is untrue.

GEORGE W. BLUNT.

THE NEW MONITOR LEHIGH.—The second iron Monitor built at Chester by REANEY, SON & ARCHBOLD, and the last of the fleet contracted for, made a successful trial trip on Saturday. About one hundred invited guests were on board. The Lehigh left Chester at 10½ o'clock, and steamed down the river as far as the mouth of the Christiana, a distance of 15 miles, in 1½ hours, tide running down, the engine making 42 revolutions, and the wind blowing fresh. On the return trip the engines made 40 revolutions, and the vessel was run about seven knots per hour against tide, reaching the city about 5 o'clock. When opposite Chester, the large 15-inch gun was fired. A number of persons were in the turret at the time, and the noise from the gun, though loaded with about 30 pounds of powder, was but trifling, and not at all unpleasant. The shock on the top of the turret is also slight, but quite severe on the deck. Two salutes were fired when the Lehigh arrived opposite the city, in front of the Navy-yard, and the other opposite Richmond. The firing of the guns and the sounding of the steam whistles from boats passed down attracted large crowds to the wharvet.

The entire trip was one of much satisfaction, as all concerned in it seemed desirous to afford the guests every facility to examine all portions of the vessel.

The following is the list of officers of the Lehigh:

Commander, JOHN C. HOWELL; Lieutenant-Commander, Robert L. Phythian; Acting Master, John Ewer; Assistant Surgeon, J. Howell Mears; Acting Assistant Paymaster, F. Clarence Imlay; Assistant Ensigns, Henry R. Towle and Robert Burke; Second Assistant Engineer, (acting Chief,) George P. Hunt; Second Assistant Engineer, Alfred Hendricks; Third Assistant Engineer, Benjamin F. Wood; Third Assistant Engineer, Wm. A. Mintzer; Third Assistant Engineer, Charles M. Vantine; Paymaster's Clerk, Charles H. Wrigley. The vessel returned to the Navy-yard, and was turned over to the Government. She will remain here probably till Wednesday, when she will leave for the seat of hostilities.—Philadelphia Ledger, April 2.

MISCELLANEOUS WAR ITEMS.

—A correspondent of the Chicago Times, writing from above Vicksburgh, says: "An important work has been progressing nightly, for two weeks or more, that I have hitherto forborne mentioning, lest it might be deemed contraband. As others now seem to know as much or more concerning it than myself, I mention it. A powerful battery is being erected on the extreme point of the main levee, opposite the lower part of the city of Vicksburgh, that will be so thoroughly casemated as to defy the rebels; will mount the heavest Parrott guns in the department, capable of throwing almost all kinds of projectiles; and that will have a range embracing almost every building in the city. With these guns it will be possible to destroy the depot, courthouse, and other public buildings, and to devastate the whole city. All work is done on it at night. It is not desirable to draw the fire of the rebel batteries until all preparations are complete, when an artillery duel worth witness is inevitable. The ram Lancaster, that was sunk by the rebels a week ago, is now said to have been so utterly worthless and rotten that her destruction in this manner is in reality our gain, by preventing a much greater catastrophe in some future action. The public are expected to be duly thankful for this small grain of comfort, and bless their lucky stars it was no worse. The Switzerland's repairs was completed two days ago. FARRAGUT'S gunboats have taken her as convoy, and gone down the river to rejoin the fleet at Port Hudson.

—A short time since the United States gunboat Octorara captured the fast sailing sloop Rosalie, as she was endeavoring to run the blockade. An officer and four men were placed on board, armed with muskets, with orders to cruise in a certain locality forty-eight hours, at the expiration of which time they were to join the Octorara. Before the time had passed the Rosalie made a strange sail, and bore down upon her, flying the rebel flag. On coming alongside, the Captain of the schooner (recognizing the sloop as a noted blockade runner and ignorant of her capture) made some inquiries as to the proximity of Federal cruisers, the best means of avoiding them, &c. After some conversation, the master of the sloop ran down the Confederate rag, and hoisted the stars and stripes, at the same time demanding the surrender of the vessel, threatening to blow her out of the water if she refused. This disconcerted the Captain of the schooner somewhat, and he quickly yielded to the superior force of five men armed with muskets. The prize proved to be a fine schooner with a valuable cargo. She had run the blockade successfully sixteen times previous.

—On Tuesday last the Andover Association of Congregational Ministers, after their customary business meeting in Lowell, Mass., went in a body to the office of Gen. BUTLER, and tendered him, through one of their number, the expression of their high appreciation of his public services, and their unfeigned thanks for the energy and devotion to the right which he had shown, and pledged to him, in whatever position he might be allowed to serve the country, the continuance of their good wishes and their prayers, assuring him that they came not as politicians, but as Christian Ministers and Christian patriots. The General replied with deep emotion. He had not expected any such reward as this. Most cordially he thanked them for their good opinions, declaring that he prized the approval of no living class of men more sincerely than those of the clergy of New-England. In the course of his remarks he expressed the most lively conviction that the result of the war would be the freedom of the country from the cause and existence of the rebellion.

—Capt. E. D. OSBAND recently made a sixteen days' trip into rebel territory from Deer Creek Landing on the Mississippi, and thus sums up the results of his expedition:

2,380 bales cotton—2,209 to Capt. Reno; 171 to Capt. Kinick. 705 beef cattle—350 to Chief Commandant of 17th Army Corps; 140 to Capt. Strickle, 15th Army Corps; 75 to Commissary of Gen. Logan's division. 100 mules—Capt. Kinick, 17th Army Corps. I have to thank all concerned for energy and good conduct. The cotton obtained was principally "C. S. A." cotton, so branded, and was pledged in London for Confederate bonds. During our stay, the Confederates burned about 5,000 bales in our vicinity. There still remains 2,000 bales "C. S. A." cotton easy of approach, and at a good landing, unburned. If you should desire to send me again, I think I can obtain it, as well as all the beef cattle you may need, besides mules untold.

—The New Albany (Ind.) Legder of April 10 states:

"Every preparation is being made in the Fourteenth Army Corps for the impending battle in the neighborhood of Tullahoma, which cannot apparently much longer be delayed. By order of Gen. ROSECRANS, shelter tents have been distributed to the army, to be substituted, in case of a movement, for those now in use. The scarcity of horses in the artillery has also rendered it necessary to require the turning over by Quartermasters, for the use of the artillery, of all the horses in their trains, and ammunition and supply trains are to be drawn hereafter by mules. The fullest supplies are being rapidly concentrated, so as to be accessible, and the drying up of the roads, now rapidly going on, will be the signal for a movement on the part of one or the other of the armies. That a battle will soon be fought, sanguinary and decisive in its results, is not doubted by those well posted."

—On April 6, the new iron-clad gunboat Choctaw arrived at the Cairo Naval Depot from St. Louis. She is yet in an unfinished condition, but in about three weeks will be ready for service. The boat is intended to be used as a ram, and is provided with a long, sharp bow, with the jackstaff set back upon the turret, which is placed in the forward part of the vessel. This turret will contain four guns, one 11-inch and one 9-inch Dahlgren, and one 200 and one 100-pound rifled Parrott. These will be placed on a revolving table worked by steam. Besides these guns, there will be two smaller pieces aft, and some 24-pound howitzers on each side. The Choctaw has been placed in charge of Lieutenant-Commander RAMSEY.

—Gen. BURNSIDE has issued the following order:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF OHIO,
CINCINNATI, Ohio, April 10, 1863.

GENERAL ORDERS, No. 36.—The Commanding General has observed with surprise that in this Department prisoners from the rebel service are frequently allowed, unguarded, the freedom of the vicinity in which they are confined. This practice must cease. Prisoners of this character must be constantly under guard, and any officer permitting a violation of this order will at once be arrested and sent to these headquarters, for such action as the Commanding General may direct. By command of Maj.-Gen. BURNSIDE.

LOUIS RICHMOND, A. A. G.

—A gentleman who left Newbern on Saturday last, April 11, has arrived in Boston. The Fifth Rhode Island regiment started on Friday night in the steamer Escort, to run the blockade, and this is probably the force whose arrival at Washington has been announced. The Third Massachusetts accompanied the Fifth Rhode Island, and the Massachusetts Forty-third had also been dispatched by steamer to relieve the force at Washington. Other regiments were under orders to be in readiness to march at any hour. The gunboat Ceres, with ammunition and provisions, also ran the blockade last week.

—There is no doubt about the fate of the Indianola. A letter to the Cincinnati Gazette, from Young's Point, La., says:

"The wreck of the Indianola stands several feet out of the water, and could have been raised by the proper means; but as this is impossible, under the circumstances, Admiral FARRAGUT amuses his ship's crew by firing broadsides into the wreck each time he passes up or down, so as to prevent it being of any use to the rebels, provided they should ever raise it."

—Capt. BOGGS, of the sloop-of-war Sacramento, which is now on blockading duty off Wilmington, N. C., made the following speech to his men on April 5:

"MEN: I am afraid that you do not keep as bright a look out as you ought. I am informed that a steamer ran in night before last; and it is supposed from our side. Now, I have got a proposition to make: To the man who reports a sail, and we take her as a prize, I will agree to give one-tenth of my prize money, and will enter into a written obligation to that effect."

—A telegram from Gen. DODGE at Corinth, confirms the statement that the rebels are rebuilding all the bridges between Decatur and Florence, and constructing boats for crossing the river. The rebel Gen. WOOD, with his command, is at Tuscumbia, and detachments of cavalry and infantry are at Waterloo and other points. These reports seem to indicate an attention to move troops from Vicksburgh to co-operate with BRAGG.

—The St. Louis Republican states as one of the facts illustrating the magnitude of the war, that 31,164 horses and 19,727 mules were purchased in that city for the army during the year ending March 31. They cost $5,911,000. Most of the animals were brought from Illinois, and the northern parts of Indiana and Ohio—Missouri having been exhausted early in the commencement of our struggle.

—The War Department has ordered ten 10-inch columbiads and a quantity of ordnance stores to be forwarded at once for the fortification on Clark's Point, near New-Bedford, Mass.

—The steamer Bermuda, lately a prize to our blockading squadron in the Gulf, has been fitting for sea at the Philadelphia Navy-yard for a considerable time past, having entered the Government service. She will be used as a transport between Philadelphia and the North and South Atlantic Blockading Squadrons, in company with the Massachusetts.

—The workmen are making steady progress, at the Philadelphia Navy-yard, with the iron-clad Tonawanda, notwithstanding the unfavorable weather. The ribs have all been erected, and nearly two-thirds of the planking placed on the sides. In addition to five inches of iron plates, the vessel will have a thickness of planking. Her two turrets will be very strong, and all the late improvements will be added. Below deck the space is roomy and comfortable.

—The Union members of the Ohio Legislature have issued a stirring address to the soldiers in the field from that State.

PERSONAL.

—It is stated that the venerable Mark Tucker, D. D., has presented to the Church in Stillwater, N. Y., (which was his first pastorate, (the greater portion of his large and valuable library, which he is no longer able to use himself, and which would be of but little service to his sons, none of them being in the ministry. The books presented are to be the nucleus of a minister's library, to be owned by the Church for the use of each succeeding pastor. The only condition of the gift is, that an annual collection be taken up by the Church for the enlargement of the library.

—The following is a list of Americans registered at Messrs. Gun & Co.'s American News Rooms, No. 19 Craven-street, Strand, London, England, for the week ending April 4, 1863: Rev. C. W. Dennison, Hyde Park, near Boston, Mass.; Samuel C. Cobb and wife, Boston; Frederick Ritso, Rochester, N. Y.; H. A. Robins, M. D., Washington, D. C.; James L. McKinstry, R. Gill, Montreal, C. E.; Frederick Ryan, San Francisco, Cal.; J. J. Low, and family, New-York; H. C. Billings, Boston, Mass.; G. A. Townsend, Philadelphia, Penn.; J. A. Knight, New-York; P. A. Andre, Brooklyn; Col. Schaffner, Kentucky

—David Duncan, Esq., of the firm of Duncan, Sherman & Co., left for New-Orleans on Wednesday, in the Morning Star.

—Jane G. Swisshelm has been appointed to a clerkship in the War Department, with a salary of $1,000 per annum.

Shall the Army Vote?

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I notice in the TIMES of the 8th of April an article headed, "SHALL THE SOLDIERS BE DISFRANCHISED."

The subject which this article presents is one of great importance to our form of government, and should be treated with a corresponding degree of deliberation. The chief, if not the only evil in the case, might flow from hasty and inconsiderate action. It is one of the defects of popular forms of government, that the people, law-givers and administrators alike, are prone to hasten from single instances to general conclusions,—to base laws and rules of action upon exceptional cases.

The question whether soldiers should vote or not, could arise only under a free Government. It could not be entertained under any other form of Government for a moment. The principle governing armies is implicit, absolute obedience, while the citizen of a free country must exercise his own independent judgment. These two conditions are irreconcilable in the same person at one and the same time. A man cannot with any propriety agree to serve the Government three years as a soldier and at the same time reserve the right to vote against the Government as a citizen. For otherwise, we should only the more complicate that confusion of ideas which we have incurred by our long efforts to reconcile slavery with liberty, and which we are now endeavoring to free ourselves from, by laying aside for a time, the functions of the citizen and assuming those of the soldier.

As a general rule, all legislation is vicious that tempts persons to do wrong; and I would submit it to your readers to decide whether one can agree to serve the Government faithfully for three years, and at the same time do no wrong by voting against it.

The great danger is that if the soldier is allowed to vote upon matters of governmental policy, he will be rendered corrupt and licentious, and instead of lending strength to the Government to suppress the rebellion, he would be the means of increasing disorder and confusion. Such was the case with the pretorian bands when, in the course of her decline, Rome accepted the Emperors who were imposed upon her by their votes. The moment that the door is thrown open to political influences in the army, that moment there is danger that the troops would be rendered worthless as soldiers, and corrupt and depraved as citizens. From the time that the army began to make the Emperors of Rome, the decline of the empire was rapid and headlong.

The evil attending the withholding of political franchise from the soldier, as I understand it, is this, that while the noblest and best of our citizens take arms as volunteers for the defence of our liberties, the residue remain at home and may give a direction to the policy of our Government in opposition to the efforts of those who are in the field, thus giving to the least worthy part of our population, and, perhaps, an absolute minority, the power to control the country. This is certainly one of the defects of our free form of Government.

But has the case, in fact, yet arisen; and will there not be time enough to legislate upon it when it does? Although we may have sent nearly a million of voters to the field, have we not still a considerable majority in favor of sustaining the Government in this death-struggle for our liberties? Are we not still safe, so far as a political majority can render us so, and in a case which is not likely to occur again in the life of the Republic once in a hundred years? It appears to me that it would be very unwise to alter the tenor of our legislation in a matter of such grave and secular importance, merely from one single case, and especially when that case itself does not call for it.

Safety to our liberties depends, not upon political franchise, but upon the intelligence and morality of the people, and what we need are measures to promote these, and not new laws for extending political freedom into the military domain. Instead of promoting the interests of public virtue by extending the right of voting to the soldier, I think that we might greatly injure them thereby.

The question is not whether the soldier shall be disfranchised or not, but whether the franchise in his case shall be suspended during his term of service as a soldier.

If over the country should be so given over to party rage that one party will stay at home and vote while the other goes to the war; or if the people who remain at home do not fairly reflect the general opinion of the country, no mere law or political measure will remedy the evil. Besides, why should we be so forward to extend the right of voting to the soldier, which is so dangerous, while a large part of the population of the country, whose loyalty is unquestionable, are not permitted either to vote or generally to bear arms? Liberty has too many resources yet for her defence to render it necessary to resort to such dangerous expedients as to expose the army to the debasing and corruptive influence of politics. The very fact of resorting to expedients, when we have so many resources still unused, turning back from a direct application of our power against the enemy to a revolutionary change of the spirit of our legislation, presents, of itself, a question of doubtful policy, and one better worthy of consideration than that of franchise to the soldiers. Yours, with great respect,

J. W. P.

A Curious Story.

HOW REID SANDERS AND HIS DISPATCHES WERE CAPTURED.

The Buffalo Express has a curious story to tell about a former Buffalonian, ARNOLD HARRIS, who went to the war as a private in the Twenty-first regiment, and who now holds the rank of Lieutenant in the United States navy. While in the army he led a detachment which surprised the rebel pickets at Matthias Point, on the Rappahannock, and afterward was appointed commander of the Island Belle. The bravery which he displayed in this capacity caused Secretary WELLES to select him to go to Richmond to endeavor to counteract the schemes of GEORGE N. SANDERS, who was then known to have gone to Europe to open negotiations for the construction of a navy for the rebels. The Express says:

"He accepted the perilous mission and soon made his way to the Confederate capital. Without any disguise of name or person, he succeeded in acquiring the confidence of the rebel authorities, and established himself on intimate terms with several of the most important officials. His situation, however, was dangerous in the extreme, and nothing but consummate coolness and adroit conduct enabled him to escape. Once he was arrested and confined in Castle Thunder for seventeen days. Two Marylanders had recognized his name as that of the former Commander of the Island Belle, and the hero of the exploit at Matthias Point. When brought to trial, he coolly acknowledged the correctness of the identification, and claimed to have done the Confederacy more service while holding a command in the Federal Navy than he could possibly have done by joining its cause at an earlier day. His audacity triumphed—all suspicion was overcome, and he not only obtained an acquittal, but continued to enjoy the confidence of the rebel authorities; or, rather all but BENJAMIN, who was suspicious of him throughout.

Shortly after his discharge from Castle Thunder, SANDERS arrived from Europe, and the adroit agent soon found means to get himself engaged in the enterprises of that busy personage. SANDERS having perfected his arrangements with Jeff. & Co., was to return to England with money and documents necessary to the carrying out of his Anglo-rebel navy schemes. His son, REID SANDERS, was to accompany him, and so, as he had contrived, was our friend HARRIS. The aim of the latter was to secure SANDERS' mail. He succeeded in having it arranged that GEORGE, with his friends should proceed by way of Matamoras to Halifax, while REID SANDERS and he, with the documents and dispatches to be taken, were to run the blockade at Charleston, and get to Halifax by way of Nassau. In accordance with this plan, SANDERS junior and HARRIS proceeded to Charleston and purchased a yacht, which, by way of speculation, they loaded with turpentine, and started gaily out, one pleasant evening in January last, to slip through the blockading fleet, and make for Nassau. Great interest was taken in the adventurous enterprise, and before leaving the daring voyagers were entertained at a dinner with BEAUREGARD and the leading celebrities of the city.

Meantime, HARRIS had succeeded in communicating with one of the vessels of the outside fleet, and putting its commander upon the watch. The yacht, as she ran out of the harbor, was speedily detected and subjected to a cannonade which frightened SANDERS out of his wits and made him eager to surrender. The mail-bag, heavily weighted with iron, was thrown overboard; but HARRIS had previously abstracted from it a portmanteau containing the important dispatches and documents, substituting in its stead his own, which happened, as a remarkable coincidence, of course, to be its exact counterpart.

The capture of REID SANDERS, with his dispatches, last Winter, created no small sensation at the time, and will be well remembered. But how it came about has never, we believe, been told before. Our readers will agree with us, we think, that few personal undertakings of the war have been more audaciously conceived or more cleverly executed. As Buffalonians, we relate the narrative of this most extraordinary adventure with no small pride."

A Financial Heroine.

BOLD EXPLOITS OF A FEMALE FORGER.

A correspondent of the Utica Morning Herald, under date of Norwich, Chenango County, April 13, furnishes that paper with an account of the financial transactions of a female, which proves her to be rather sharp in the "confidence" line. He states that some ten days ago, a well-dressed, bright, lady-like looking woman, of the apparent age of 25 years, was brought to Earlville. There she hired, under plea of urgent business, a horse and buggy, to go to Norwich and back in four hours—a distance of thirty-two miles, over a hard road. The livery man, not supplying the buggy with a whip, she rather ostentatiously handled the ostler a ten dollar bill with which to buy one for her. She drove down to Sherburne village, and stopped at JOSHUA PRATT'S Bank, where she negotiated two drafts, drawn, one by the Lake Ontario Bank of Oswego, to the order of a Mr. GEORGE, purporting to be for $90, and the other drawn by the Marine Bank of Oswego, to the order of MARY TERRY, purporting to be also for $90. (The draft to GEORGE had been indorsed by him.) Pocketing her money, she drove to Oswego and stopped at ALLEN'S Hotel. Directing her horse to be fed and cared for, she inquired for the nearest bank, and was shown to the Bank of Chenango, where she negotiated the sale of two other drafts, drawn, one by the same Lake Ontario Bank of Oswego to the order of a Mr. GEORGE, purporting to be for $80, and the other by the Salt Springs Bank of Syracuse, to the order of MARY TERRY, and purporting to be for $96. She represented in each case that she was the Mrs. MARY TERRY named in the drafts, and that Mr. GEORGE was her brother, a soldier. These several drafts, originally genuine for eight and nine dollars each, had been altered respectively to eighty and ninety dollars each. The Herald's correspondent gives the further movements of this adroit forger as follows:

"She returned northward by way of Earlville, and so on to Morrisville, where, fatigued with long travel, she went to bed. But the Pratt's Bank had their suspicions aroused concerning the drafts, and telegraphed the Oswego Bank, which pronounced them forgeries. Deputy Sheriff BRYANT started immediately for Mrs. TERRY, with Justice PLUMB'S warrant, and arrested her in bed, at midnight, in Morrisville. Upon being brought back to Sherburne, she asserted her entire ignorance of anything wrong in the matter, and expressed her readiness to repair all injury by taking up the drafts cashed at the Pratt's Bank, which she did upon the spot. She than spoke, voluntarily, of the drafts that had been cashed for her at the Bank of Chenango, saying she was apprehensive that they too might be forgeries, and she gave Officer BRYANT the funds to come down and take them up, in case they should be so pronounced. He did come down and redeem them. She was, however, still under the law. She waived an examination before the magistrate, who named the bail at $1,000, and allowed her until Wednesday morning last to procure it. She affected entire composure, and appeared fully confident that the needful friends would be forthwith appearing in due time. She remained in her room at Medbury's Hotel, well watched and guarded, until Tuesday night, when, from some cause, there was a relaxation of vigilance, and she escaped from the house. Officer BRYANT failed to discover her track until near noon. She had walked across the canal and river, and gone down about four miles, into the town of North Norwich, where she took a horse of Mr. BISSELL'S from his stable, and rode him, with a halter, into Plymouth. There she hired a conveyance to Preston Corners, (six miles) where she engaged the hotel-keeper—VANNESS GLAZIER, Esq.—who was also a Deputy Sheriff, to convey her to Cincinnatus, (19 miles,) on the way to the Syracuse and Binghamton Railroad. But the avengers, in the shape of BRYANT and his men, were close behind. They overhauled her within a mile of Cincinnatus village, and brought her the same evening to Norwich in the Podunk stage. She rested over night at the Eagle Hotel, with female watchers, and took breakfast at the same place the next morning. But she again managed to escape. The succeeding night she eluded their vigilance and eloped. There were, doubtless, male watchers for her on the outside. She has not been pursued. The sympathies of the good people of Sherburne had become enlisted in her behalf—she having made restitution to those she had wronged—and hence her easy exit from the town."

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

The Harbor Defence Commission.

Aldermen Boole, Hardy, Mitchell and Ottiwell, and Councilmen Houghtalin and Repper, of this Commission, and also Aldermen Henry, Jeremiah, Farley and Long, yesterday afternoon visited Jersey City to witness a trial of the Tillinghurst and Requa battery—an invention that had been commended to the attention of the Commission by the President, Mayor OPDYKE, who had witnessed an exhibition of its firing on a previous occasion.

At the place selected for the trial—the Club-house grounds—the company were joined by Ex-Gov. PRICE, of New-Jersey, and Hon. THEODORE TOMLINSON and Dr. GARDINER, of New-York.

The battery exhibited consists of a series of twenty-five rifled barrels, somewhat larger than an ordinary gun rifle, and the balls fired from them are of conical shape and about the size of the Minié ball. The battery worked very satisfactorily, discharging its missiles at targets placed off in the water at the distance of 250, 750 and 1,350 feet. It is so arranged that three men operate it, and the balls are made to converge to one object, or to scatter across a front of a hundred yards by converging or separating the muzzles of the rifles to or from each other, at the option of the operator, by the action of a lever working in a very simple manner. The invention is designed for use as a field piece on land, or to repel boarding parties from vessels.

After the exhibition the company repaired to the house of MR. A. HITCHCOCK, near by, where a handsome collation was furnished.

Mr. TOMLINSON thanked the Commission for their attendance in a few remarks, and was eloquent in delineating the need of putting our harbor in a defensible condition.

Alderman HARDY responded for the Commission, saying he could not predict what would be the precise character of their labors, but they realized the importance of their duty, and would soon enter upon it with a determination of fully meeting the desire of the people of the City to protect the Metropolis from any enemy that might approach it. At present they had no plan of defence decided upon, but invited the genius and talent of the country to aid them in arriving at some practicable conclusion as to what course should be pursued. One end must be attained—the thorough protection of the harbor. The people of New-York City were determined upon this, and would do it of themselves if the State would not help them. But they would rather have the cooperation not only of the State of New-York, but of the State of New-Jersey, and of the General Government as well, for what concerned the stability and safety of New-York City concerned also the welfare of the nation.

Ex-Gov. PRICE was glad New-York City had moved in the matter, and hoped the movement would speedily lead to a sense of security to the inhabitants of New-York and the people of Jersey City, who were equally interested. The importance of the duty of the Commission could not be magnified too much, and in support of its fulfillment no dollar and cents interest should keep it from being carried out in the very best manner; and he hoped that the genius of the land would be waked and encouraged to devise the best of plans to shield the City from all foes.

Dr. GARDINER hoped the Commission would not be clogged in their action by any partial judgment of the merits of any invention presented to them, but give each man of brains, who had a plan to submit, a candid and thorough hearing, and if his ideas were good, give them the test of practice, if possible. He was glad to hear that it was the purpose of the Commission to give each man of genius a hearing who desired it. He regretted that this disposition had not marked the course of conduct of the heads of Bureaux at Washington.

Major M. B. HARTLEY acquitted the Government of coldness toward inventors, so far as concerned the battery, the firing of which they had just seen. It had received both favor and adoption at Wash

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

We have very little war news this morning. A report was given currency in one of the morning journals yesterday, that a portion of Gen. HOOKER'S army, under Gen. STONEMAN, had driven the rebels out of Culpepper and Gordonsville, and occupied the latter place, but we learn from Washington that there is nothing authentic to sustain such a report. There is a movement of some kind going on, however, if we are to believe the evidence contained in the following paragraph, copied from the Richmond Dispatch, of the 15th: "It was reported by parties who came down on the Central train last night, that a rumor prevailed at Gordonsville yesterday that a fight was in progress at Kelly's Ford, in Culpepper County. It is not unlike that HOOKER is again endeavoring to throw his forces across the Rappahannock, with a view to a forward movement."

Some additional particulars of the fight between our gunboats and the rebels on the Nansemond River have reached us. The facts, however have already been given in the official dispatches The Mount Washington, which was temporarily disabled in the affair, has been towed down to Newport's News, where she will be repaired. Our naval force on the river has been reinforced by additions from the Potomac flotilla, and LONGSTREET'S chances for crossing have been proportionably diminished. A letter from our correspondent at Suffolk, published this morning, gives an interesting account of the operations of the land forces since the appearance of LONGSTREET'S command.

We have advices from Port Royal, S. C., to the 15th inst., by the arrival at this port of the steamship Cahawba. All the Monitors had returned from Charleston bar to Port Royal for repairs. The United States troops still occupied Seabrook and Folly Islands. It was reported that the Monitors would leave for New-Orleans as soon as repaired, to make an attack on Port Hudson and Vicksburgh, but there seems to be some doubt about this. The Ironsides was still off Charleston harbor, where she is to remain, to oppose any attempt at a raid among the blockaders by the rebel rams.

A dispatch from Young's Point, dated the 8th, which we find in the Chicago Tribune, gives the following information: "It is said the gunboat Lafayette will run the batteries at Vicksburgh to-morrow. The ram Switzerland and the Hartford and Albatross have gone down the Mississippi, and are now blockading the mouth of Red River. It is not unlikely they may pay their respects to Fort Taylor, at Gordon's Landing, the scene of the late capture of the Queen of the West. Black River, as far as Harrisburgh, where the enemy have erected formidable batteries, is also mentioned as their possible destination."

A rebel dispatch from Jackson, Miss., dated the 16th, states that the National troops which had been at Lake Providence had moved to Vicksburgh and Grenada; that a heavy movement of Gen. GRANT'S forces commenced on Thursday, and that the town of New-Carthage was in our possession.

The news from the rebel States which we publish this morning, will be found interesting. The question of food is the one now most present before the Southern people—the leaders and the Press seizing every occasion to urge the planting of grain and other food instead of cotton and tobacco.

THE STATE LEGISLATURE.

In the Senate yesterday, among the bills passed was the one to reimburse the Manhattan Company the money expended for gold to pay the interest on the State debt, and Mr. MURPHY'S Quarantine bill. Concurrent resolutions authorizing the Superintendent of the Banking Department to inquire into the condition of the Savings Banks were offered by Mr. MUNROE, and laid over under the rule. The bill providing for compensation to the members of the New-York Common Council was ordered to a third rending.

In the Assembly, the bill relative to arrears of taxes and assessments in New-York City was passed; also the bill conferring additional powers on Boards of Supervisors. No other business of importance was done.

GENERAL NEWS.

The Harbor Defence Commission visited Jersey City yesterday, and witnessed an exhibition of the firing of the Tillinghust & Requa Rifled Battery—an invention commended to their attention by Mayor OPDYKE, who is the President of the Commission. After the exhibition there was a collation, and brief speeches by Hon. THEODORE E. TOMLINSON, Alderman HARDY, Ex-Gov. PRICE, of New-Jersey, and Dr. GARDINER, of New-York.

The final count of the vote cast on the Amended Constitution of Western Virginia has been made, and sums up in the 38 counties heard from, 28,321 for the amendment and 572 against it. The Commissioners threw out, on account of informality, 422 votes that were cast in favor of the amendment, but rejected none that were against it. Ten counties it seems were not heard from. Either no elections were held in them, or the vote has failed to come to hand.

Breadstuffs were in very moderate demand on Saturday at drooping prices. The principal inquiry for Provisions was for hog products, which were freely offered at, in some instances, easier rates. Cotton was quiet and declining. Hay, Sugars, Molasses, and East India Rice were in active request. A moderate business was transacted in Fish, Tallow, Whisky, and Clover Seed. Other articles were inactive. Light freight engagements were reported,—with 470 vessels of all classes in port.

The Rise and Fall of Rebel Leaders.

One of the most singular and least expected consequences of the rebellion has been to sink into oblivion nine-tenths of the traitors who brought it about. Only three or four of the whole batch of conspirators who stampeded from Washington during the two or three months which preceded the inauguration of Mr. LINCOLN, have ever been heard of since. DAVIS, who was elected President before the events of the war had brought other names into prominence, still keeps his head above water, while BENJAMIN, who became Secretary of State, and who is a dexterous man of affairs, is also still occasionally heard from through his intercepted correspondence. But, with these exceptions, we hardly recall a man of the old Southern political régime who is now prominent. Where are now Cobb, Toombs, Wise, Hunter, Yancey, Keitt, Clingman, Rhett, Hammond, Miles, Lamar, Barksdale, Reuben Davis, Percy Walker, Savage, Edmondson, and a host of others, who have sunk so far out of sight that their names even cannot be recalled without the aid of a directory. They have all fallen into a degree of insignificance which cannot be fathomed. We occasionally read of the doings of the rebel Congress and Legislatures, but scarcely an allusion is ever made to one of these ancient worthies.

In his quiet way, the smooth and philosophical HUNTER was one of the most thoroughpaced Secessionists, as he was, perhaps, their most intellectual man. He was regarded as a probable President, and failing in that, none could doubt that he would take a leading part n rebel politics. But he seems to have been in the background ever since the war commenced. Even STEPHENS, the able orator, who in the first paroxysm of anarchy was made Vice-President, seems to be quite forgotten. That man of war, TOOMBS, it was said, carried about the rebel State Department in his hat for a few weeks after the inauguration of DAVIS, but resigned, or was got rid of in some way. He afterward went into the army for a time as a Brigadier, and was wounded. But latterly we have only heard of him in the bitter denunciations hurled against him by his neighbors in public meeting, for his selfish persistence in the culture of cotton amid the universal scarcity of provisions. Bombastes Furioso WISE "fizzled out" as a military genius at an early stage of the contest. PRYOR was said to be in command of a small force on the Blackwater, but has yet to win his laurels. CLINGMAN, it was stated about two years ago, had raised a regiment, but what he has done with it no man can tell. KEITT, who for years prior to the commencement of the war, habitually lived on the raw flesh of his victims, and breathed only sulphurous flames, has doubtless been in the depths of Whipping Swamp; for he has sunk out of sight since hostilities commenced, until the other day he flashed up for an instant as being in command at Fort Moultrie. An intercepted letter of BENJAMIN informs us that LAMAR, that all-devouring son of Mars, is on a mission of peaceful negotiation to Russia. BARKSDALE, who lost his scalp in one of those early forays made by the chivalry, by way of testing their metal in the House of Representatives, has passed into oblivion. CLAY and FITZPATRICK have not been mentioned. BROWN, of Mississippi, has not been thought of; CHESTNUT, ditto; JOHN BELL, the man who was pledged to the "Union, the Constitution and the enforcement of the laws," is supposed to have turned traitor, because his old political rival, ANDREW JOHNSON, did not; he was fleeing South at last accounts. The rebel Governor of Tennessee, HARRIS, ran away with his government in the direction of Memphis on the approach of our troops to Nashville, and again he fled from Memphis on the advance of our forces to that city; and since then he has been down in the Gulf States and "traveling all over." PILLOW, who illustrated his military genius while in Mexico by digging the moat on the inside, has shown a commendable desire to serve the rebels in the field, but he is no more highly appreciated by JEFF. DAVIS than he was by Gen. SCOTT. HUMPHREY MARSHALL and COBB are rivals for the honor of being regarded as the Falstaffs of the rebellion. Strange to say, FLOYD, who carried off the palm from his confederate knaves and traitors, in having rendered their cause more substantial service by his robberies, while under the obligations of his official oath to the Government of the United States, has shown himself equally their superior in the field; and he is almost the only one of the whole body of conspirators who has relieved, by conduct in the field, the all-pervading infamy which attaches to their names.

In place of these defunct political conspirators, the South is now ruled and led by an entirely new set of men. The names now prominent before the rebel public, and of whom we read in their newspapers, were all unknown at the commencement of the war. Their chief commander, Gen. ROBERT E. LEE, although belonging to one of the "first families," and a man of wealth and ability, was only a Colonel in the regular service, and scarcely known to the people of either section. The JOHNSTONS, one or both, were army officers, but their reputation was confined to army circles. BEAUREGARD was only a Captain, and not one man in a thousand had ever heard of him until after the secession of South Carolina. BRAGG'S name had once been somewhat familiar in connection with that of Gen. TAYLOR and "a little more grape." Stonewall JACKSON, whose name is now a household word among friends and foes, had never been heard of beyond the limits of his native valley; and the same is true of LONGSTREET, STUART, ASHBY, the HILLS, VAN DORN, SMITH and the rest. The late Vice-President BRECKINRIDGE, who turned traitor upon "second thought," after the rebellion commenced, has managed to keep up his name and to maintain his position by his supposed influence in Kentucky; but his achievements have been anything but brilliant, and there can be no doubt that JEFF. DAVIS will get rid of him as a commander as soon as practicable.

The moral of this cursory review would seem to be obvious. It teaches the wholesome lesson, that a rebellion incited by a band of defeated demagogues, in order to snatch back the power which they had lost in a free and fair election, will not inure to their benefit. If their cause had been noble, and their motives disinterested, as were the cause and the motives of the men of our Revolution, they would not so soon have been forgotten. But actuated as they have been by a low and disappointed ambition, they are not the men to direct the storm they have raised, and the sceptre departs from them.

The Position and Prospects of Poland.

The accounts received from Poland are of the most contradictory character. The other day it was announced that the defeat and flight of LANGIEWICZ had given a death blow to the insurrection, and that many of the chiefs were abandoning the cause as hopeless. Now it is reported that the Dictator's disaster and disappearance have had no such effect, and that the warlike conflagration is extending and becoming fiercer. These contradictions may, perhaps, be reconciled. The contest is not carried on by the Poles with great armies, but with numerous guerrilla hordes; and when any of these bands are cut off or scattered by the Russians, then rumor will have it that because the struggle has ceased in a particular district, therefore the insurrection is crushed; while, on the other hand, it is said to be spreading and gathering strength as often as the scene changes and the strife is renewed in a fresh quarter.

But though the conflict still rages, it is not at all likely that the result will be favorable, in a military sense, to the Poles. Their third great effort to recover nationality seems to be about failing for the same reasons to which may be ascribed the ill-success of their preceding efforts. The antipathies of factions, the jealousies and squabbles of Generals and leaders, have always been prolific sources of Poland's misfortunes. But the singular want of judgment invariably displayed by her revolutionary leaders in selecting the time of conflict, has more than all contributed to render her struggles abortive. Instead of choosing those periods for revolution during which Russia was involved in foreign war, and when her undivided strength could not be directed against them, the Polish separatists have ever suffered those auspicious seasons to pass away, and have postponed the encounter till the oppressor was at peace with all the world, and able to employ his entire military force in crushing them. Had the heroic attempt of KOSCIUSKO been made when the real design of the spoliators first became apparent, the dismemberment of Poland might have been averted. Had the insurrection of 1830 taken place two years earlier, when the Muscovite was warring with the Turk, the chances are that the result would have been entirely different. Or had the time of the Crimean conflict, when NICHOLAS was battling against the Western Powers, been selected for the pending struggle, might not the issue have been then as successful as it now promises to be disastrous?

But Poland's uniform ill-success must not be attributed solely to the rashness, rivalry and incapacity of the leaders. The geographical situation of the Kingdom—it being remote from the sea, environed on all sides by enemies, and beyond the reach of external aid—has also contributed to her misfortunes.

The nations interested in perpetuating the dismemberment of Poland are too many and too powerful for Western intervention vi et armis to be thought of. England is feeble as a military State, and were the Third NAPOLEON so Quixotic as to enter the lists single-handed, as the champion of Polish independence, he would be guilty of an act of temerity from which even the daring genius of his uncle shrank. So far, indeed, are the Allies from intending to risk war for the sake of Poland, that they do not venture to ask for her liberation. In their notes to the Court of St. Petersburgh, France merely begs that the grievances of the Polish people may be redressed, and England that the stipulations of the treaty of Vienna in their favor may be carried out. Lest these pacific intercessions should prove fruitless, something additional is being done to render them efficacious. Earl RUSSELL is now endeavoring to obtain the assent of the Powers which were parties to the treaty in question, to the convocation of another European Congress, and, if he succeed, to the consideration of this council will be submitted the case of Poland. But his Lordship's success is by no means certain. Russia was a party to the Treaty of Vienna, and should the Czar object to this intermeddling between himself and his Polish subjects, a Congress will hardly be convoked. WILLIAM of Prussia, too, in his present state of mind, will not be much disposed to promote the wishes of the Western Powers; while Austria, in despite of assurances to the contrary, cannot be very anxious to have the Polish question brought before such a tribunal. For she, as well as Russia, has been a violator of the stipulations of 1815, and cannot come into court with clean hands. The Republic of Cracow, which was guaranteed liberty and autonomy by the Viennese Treaty, whither has it vanished? It is gone, like the Constitution of Poland, and Austria possesses the spoils; who, then, will believe that she desires its resurrection?

The most prudent and most dignified course, however, for the Czar to pursue, is to render the convocation of a Congress unnecessary, by freely restoring to the people of Poland those rights which his predecessor and namesake conceded to them, and of which they have been so long deprived. Had the Constitution granted to the Poles by ALEXANDER the First been properly respected on the part of Russia, neither the insurrection of 1830, nor the present insurrection would have taken place. The Russian Poles are just as capable of loyalty as their brethren who are subjects of Prussia and Austria. Let the Czar give back to his Polish provinces their National Diet, an upright Judiciary, and religious liberty; let him cast away the iron sceptre of the conqueror, and discharge his duties as King of Poland; and he may in time find that portion of the Sarmatian race which is under his sway, not less faithful and contented than the natives of Gallicia or Posen.

The Interregnum in Greece.

The nomination of a brother-in-law of the Prince of Wales to the throne of Greece—following, as that arrangement did, with suspicious haste on the abrupt withdrawal of the Greek Legation from London—brings into strong relief one of the most striking pictures of recent diplomacy in England. We shall not weary our readers with all the details, but it is worth while to take a hurried glance at some of the transactions of the British Foreign Office, in the matter of finding a successor for King OTHO, during the last six months. We shall discover in the retrospect a clue to the hesitating acts of the Provisional Government at Athens.

To see the fast-and-loose game which Lord RUSSELL found it expedient to play, we must turn as far back as the month of October last, when his Lordship addressed the Governments of France and Russia on the interpretation of the treaties made at the time when the independence of Greece was recognized by the leading Powers. In his eagerness not to be circumvented by Russian intrigues, the English Minister hastened, with indiscreet and foolish zeal, to disclaim any desire for the accession of an English Prince to the vacant throne. And he took occasion, at the same time, to lay down the law, that the reigning families of all the three Powers were equally excluded from that dignity.

For a month or more, M. DROUYN DE LHUYS appears to have conned over this dispatch; and on the 4th of November he made up his mind to startle the British Minister by the declaration that "the circumstances are not absolutely the same with those which formerly existed," and that he could not "pretend that the restrictive clause of the protocol (excluding English, French and Russian Princes from the throne of Greece) is applicable to the present state of things."

Two days after the receipt of this alarming dispatch, Lord RUSSELL, finding that Prince ALFRED'S name was well received in Greece, and that, if Russia should interpret the protocol of 1832 in the same sense as France, there was danger of a French or Russian Prince becoming a candidate, wrote to his agent at Athens in these terms: "Her Majesty's Government have no desire to influence the decision which the Greeks may come to," except, as he adds, to remind them of the protocol of 1832. Up to this point, it will be noticed, the thought uppermost in the British Minister's mind was to defeat the possible candidature of a French or Russian nominee. But at the same time, in the dispatch last referred to, it will be seen he left a sort of half-open door for Prince ALFRED, in deprecating any desire to influence the election. That Lord RUSSELL purposely left this opening is plainly apparent in one of his subsequent dispatches, dated the 17th of November. He instructs Mr. SCARLETT, at Athens, in these terms: "I have to desire that you will not interfere in regard to the election of the future Sovereign of Greece without direct instructions from Her Majesty's Government. Their desire is that the Greeks should be left free to choose their King. With regard to the obligations of the three protecting Powers to one another, I may have further communications to make to you."

M. DROUYN DE LHUYS and Prince GORTSCHAKOFF both appear to have interpreted this dispatch in its natural and real sense. The former, in one of his dispatches, says: "The prolonged silence of the British Government" was equivalent to an "implicit assent" to the candidature of Prince ALFRED. And Prince GORTSCHAKOFF, writing on the 2d December, says, the English dread of the alternative of a Russian Prince (failing Prince ALFRED) made Her Majesty's Ministers "believe themselves authorized in not discouraging the sympathies of the people" for a member of the English Royal family.

Lord RUSSELL'S own agent at Athens, moreover, interpreted the purport and bearing of his Chief's diplomacy in the same sense as the French and Russian Ministers, and gave all the indirect encouragement he could to the popular movement. On the 23d of November, Mr. SCARLETT received the honor of a special ovation from an assembly of 2,000 persons, and made the company a speech, in which he thanked them for their partiality toward the Prince. The following night he had a still larger demonstration, and again Lord RUSSELL'S deputy renewed his expressions of gratitude. The British Consuls at various points in the Peninsula were even less reserved than the Ambassador. One of them, a Mr. NEALE, said in a popular assembly: "You naturally return to the free British nation, and the choice of your hearts is fixed on Prince ALFRED."

But the echo of these demonstrations, and the attendant speeches, had not died away, when Lord RUSSELL writes again to Athens to say that, independently of the protocol of 1832, the Queen objects to Prince ALFRED'S acceptance of the throne. And thus ended the first delusion of the Greeks in their attempted election of a King. The second was scarcely less creditable to the British Ministry. On the 5th of last February, Mr. LAYARD was instructed by Lord RUSSELL to advise Mr. SCARLETT that the Duke of Saxe-Coburg had agreed to accept the proffered throne, and was to name (in default of direct issue) as his successor a grandson of LOUIS PHILLIPPE, and the son of one of the Duke's own cousins. Within three days, however, of the date of this strange letter, Lord PALMERSTON publicly stated in the House of Commons that the Duke of Saxe-Coburg was sounded privately on the subject of the Greek sovereignty, "and promptly declined being put in nomination." Surely if these transactions do not indicate deceit in the British Foreign Office, they indicate a powerful lack of candor, and amply illustrate at least one of the motives for the withdrawal of the Greek Legation from London.

The temporary breach, however, which was thus created, is now most probably healed by the compromise agreed upon in the selection of this Danish Prince. As a poor relation of the English Royal family he will serve all the ends of English diplomacy in the East; and by the same relationship he probably brings to the Hellenic people the peculiar qualifications they appeared to find in Prince ALFRED.

The Palmetto Chivalry.

If there is anybody whom a South Carolinian hates more than a Yankee, it is a Georgian; if there is anything he despises more than a free negro, it is a North Carolinian. The Georgians and North Carolinians, moreover, living contiguous to the Palmetto State, the former on the west and the other on the east, the chivalry's detestation and contempt for them is livelier and more personal than for the Yankees, who live a great distance off, and regarding whom your average South Carolinian knows very little. The term a "Georgia Yankee" has long been an epithet of reproach in South Carolina, as applied to the people on the other side of the Savannah River; while they say that if you come by rail from the North, you can tell when you pass from North into South Carolina, even with your eyes shut;—you can distinguish between the abject gait of a North Carolinian and the proud stride of your genuine son of Chivalry—between the whining, cowardly accents of the former, and the proud, defiant tone of the latter. The South Carolinians never were willing to be considered a part of this American nation—they were a nation by themselves. They hold that the world is constituted of two peoples—South Carolinians and outside barbarians. If this war were over, with the Confederacy triumphant to-morrow, we verily believe that South Carolina would declare war against Georgia and North Carolina before the close of the week.

We have no doubt that late events have added—if that be possible—to the already stupendous vanity of the South Carolina chivalry. They have repulsed the Yankee fleet and the Yankee army. Twenty millions of Yankees have been laboring for two years to get up an army and navy strong enough to take Charleston, and a mere handful of the chivalry have repelled them. TIMES will write songs about it; SIMMS will write novels about it; KEITT will scream about it; RHETT will roar over it. The dingy Mercury will fill endless columns with it; and the unfortunate Courier, which is now stopped for want of paper, will doubtless, when it gets a supply, print and reprint all the facts and falsities concerning it a hundred times over.

It is a terrible thorn in the side of South Carolina vanity—the encampment of our troops at Port Royal, and the enlistment of a negro regiment within her borders. It galls her worse than all the other adverse incidents of the war. She has repelled us from Charleston harbor, but she has not power to drive us from the sea islands. These islands used to be the pride and glory of the State, and the source of a great deal of its wealth. Now a few Yankees in blue coats and a few negroes in red breeches are planted on them, and bid defiance to all the chivalry. But this is not all the humiliation that the insolent vanity of South Carolina must yet suffer. Every rood of her territory and every white man and black man within her borders must be brought back under the flag of the Union. We have been temporarily repelled at Charleston; but Charleston and every other town in the State will surely be reduced to our arms. And with its subjugation will tumble down the pride and arrogance of the vainest and meanest brood of traitors on this continent.

LORD PALMERSTON AND THE ALABAMA.—In his marvelously impertinent speech before the House of Commons, a few days ago, when the question of the responsibility which should attach to the British Government for allowing the Alabama and kindred craft to be equipped in and dispatched from English ports to prey upon our commerce, was under discussion, Lord PALMERSTON stated that, while the contest in Spain, between the Carlists and Queen ISABELLA was raging, it was his duty, as one of the officers of the Crown, to see that no supplies of arms left England for the revolutionists. Two or three ships were fitting out on the Thames at that time which he was morally certain were intended to go in aid of Don CARLOS. It was found impossible, however, to establish the fact legally, and the Government did not feel itself warranted in seizing them. There Lord PALMERSTON dropped the parallel, claiming that it was complete, and that his case was established. Unless legal proof were lodged with the officers of the Crown that steamers were building to play the part of privateers for the Confederates, no steps could be taken to arrest their construction or delay their departure from British ports.

A correspondent of the London Star, however, takes the pains to jog the memory of Lord PALMERSTON, regarding some points in the sequel to the parallel which he himself selected, regarding which he was curiously and conveniently forgetful. The United Kingdom was one of the vessels building upon the banks of the Thames, at the time referred to, for the service of Don CARLOS. While she was fitting out, she was watched most vigilantly, and when she was ready to leave her dock, although she had no armament on board, a British frigate was in waiting, and actually followed her to sea, stopping at every port which she visited, ready to pounce upon her the moment it became apparent that an effort was to made to equip her as a vessel of war. The officers of the craft quickly saw that their game was blocked, they brought back the United Kingdom to London, and for years afterward she lay quietly in the East India Docks, at Blackwall. Does anyone suppose that the Alabama and Oreto would now be roaming the seas and preying upon our mercantile marine, if Lord PALMERSTON had displayed as ardent a desire as this to preserve toward our Government that neutrality of which he talked so flippantly in his speeches at Glasgow? He has searched English history for a precedent to justify his conduct toward our Government, and to a certain point the cases are parallel. Now let him see to it that he makes the case in hand perfectly coincident with the precedent which he has himself selected.

INFORMATION FOR THE ENEMY.—We are sorry to observe that our efforts last week to keep from the rebels the information as to the numbers and effective force of HOOKER'S army, which was concealed under the shape of a medical report, have been frustrated. The report was published yesterday in the Commercial Advertiser, and came to us also last evening in the Baltimore American and other papers. We are sorry that these two loyal and honest journals should have given the report publication, after our suppression of it, and our warning of its dangerous character; as it conveys information about our army which we have no doubt HOOKER would give ten thousand dollars to obtain about the rebel army. The War Department might as well have sent JEFF. DAVIS a list of all the regiments in the Army of the Potomac, with the number of effective men in each—to which might have been added the time and line of the campaign about to be opened in Virginia.

THE LESSON AT CHARLESTON.

The French and British Navies—Their Iron-Clads as Compared with our Monitors—No Danger of a War with France—Monitors for the Harbors, &c.

Correspondence of the New-York Times:

WASHINGTON, Thursday, April 16, 1863.

Your editorial "improvement" on the lesson taught by the attack on Charleston is apropos, and it may be hoped that it will be read by Lord PALMERSTON. In the same connection I will allude to an elaborate statement of the present condition of the French navy, made by DONALD MCKAY, Esq., in a letter from Paris to the Boston Bulletin in January last. That gentleman visited all the navy-yards of France, and made himself thoroughly familiar with this arm of the French service, present and prospective. He states that, "After all I have seen, it is my firm conviction that France is the first naval Power on the globe, and further, that no other Power will possess at the end of another year a fleet capable to cope successfully with the French iron-cased fleet on the open sea."

This iron-cased fleet consisted in November last of six frigates afloat, and ten in course of construction; the latter can be finished by the middle of the present year. The total steam navy of France consisted of 325 vessels of all kinds afloat, and 42 building. Of sailing vessels she had 119 afloat, and three building.

With these facts before the British Government, it is not at all probable that it will venture to make open war upon the United States, except with the coöperation of France. Eager as her ruling classes are to see the American Union divided, and despicable as may be their underhand efforts to aid the rebellion, I cannot believe that the Government of that country would risk the consequences of a war with the United States, unsupported by France. LOUIS NAPOLEON could ask for nothing better than to see the two great commercial Powers at war. If, as is asserted, and as England fears, he adheres to the ambitious idea of his uncle, and bides his time for an invasion of that country, a war between England and America would supply him with the opportunity. And if he cherishes no such project, still such a war would afford an opportunity for the expansion of French commerce which it has never enjoyed in the past. France might become what America was sixty years ago, the common carrier for the world, and the navigating interests of the Empire would receive a momentum which would be permanent in its effects. In the meantime the great power of France upon sea and land would command the respect of the belligerents, and each would be very thankful for a strict observance of neutrality.

These considerations must be too obvious to be overlooked by the enlightened mind of the French Emperor, and I am greatly mistaken if they fail to exert their proper influence. It is doubtless true that LOUIS NAPOLEON is no lover of democratic institutions, but at least he has no hereditary antipathies against the American Republic, such as are indulged by the aristocracy of England. He is not sustained by a ruling class hostile to us, as is the British Government. On the contrary, with individual exceptions, the French people of all classes have an hereditary attachment to the United States, the independence of which their forefathers assisted ours in establishing. The French, as a people, are passionate lovers of liberty and equality; and if they have less of the former than the English upper and middle classes, they have a great deal more of the latter. There is a far more equal distribution of property in France than in England, the landed property in the former being subdivided into smaller parcels than in any other country in the world. There are few such princely revenues in France as are common in England among the nobility, gentry, merchants and bankers. Frequent revolutions have broken down the barriers of castes, and in consequence of this fact, there is practically more freedom and personal independence among the French peasantry than among the same class in England, in spite of its boasted safeguards of liberty.

The proposed mediation of France in American affairs was in terms courteous and friendly, and thus far we have seen no reason of doubting the veracity of the diplomatic note, which asserted that nothing more was meant than met the eye. The Secretary of State gave to it a perfectly courteous answer, and it is to be hoped that all irritation on the subject has passed away. The Emperor has been assured that under no circumstances, now or hereafter, will our Government entertain the idea of a dissolution of the Union, and I believe that he will see, upon a full survey of the subject, that he has nothing to gain by our dismemberment. At least he has more to hope from a continuance of the peaceful relations of the two countries, than from their rupture. Let us, then, by all means, cultivate sentiments of friendship with France, our ancient ally, and we may be sure that that friendship will be the best security for the good behavior of England.

It may be remarked that the iron-clad frigates of France and England, formidable as they undoubtedly are for an open sea fight, could accomplish much less in an attack on fortifications than our iron-clad Monitors. The frigates are high above water, and for that very reason their iron coating is much thinner than that of our Monitors, since so much surface, coated with ten or twelve inches of iron, would sink the ship. They expose, perhaps, ten times as much perpendicular surface, and that much less protected, while their decks, (if I am not mistaken as to their construction, are surrounded by walls like those of other ships.

It having been demonstrated, by the attack on Charleston, that iron-clad Monitors can be repulsed by stationary artillery, defended by brick walls and sand backs, it follows, as a matter of course, that iron-clad frigates could accomplish nothing against such fortifications. It had been a well-settled point in naval warfare, in the age of wooden walls, that guns mounted on shipboard were no match for similar guns mounted on stone or brick fortifications. The same maxim will still hold good, at least as it regards iron-clad frigates and ships-of-the line; while the Monitors, even, have yet to show their invincibility.

It may be well to make another reflection upon the lesson taught by the attack upon Charleston. It is this: All the Northern ports of the Union can be made invulnerable to the approach of the great iron-clad navies of Europe, while the blockade can be maintained by the Monitors. The nine Monitors, with their thirty guns, which besieged Charleston at the last full moon, were unable to overcome the resistance of the three hundred and odd cannon which enfilade the harbor, but I have not a doubt that they could keep out the whole iron-clad frigate fleet of France. The latter would have been riddled if it had been exposed to the terrible cannonade which the little Monitors endured; and it may be doubted if one of those noble ships could have survived the conflict. Whenever a great naval conflict shall take place at sea, the iron-clad navy of France will demonstrate its superiority to everything which has hitherto been attempted. But near the shore, or rather, within the rivers and harbors, they could not stand up to a hand-to-hand fight with the Monitors. Thanks, then, to Mr. ERICSSON, and may the Government be alive to the importance of building Monitors until every harbor shall swarm with them. SPECTATOR.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK.

The Quarterlies.

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW, No. CXCIX, April, 1863. Boston: CROSBY & NICHOLS.

Literature occupies the chief portion of the new number of this, our oldest quarterly. The only article relating to the contests of the day being an able and justly appreciated notice of Prof. CARNES' work on "The Slave Power in America." All the known facts and gossip about the life and works of THOMAS GRAY, are pleasantly given in an article on that poet. An elaborate review of MERIVALE'S "History of the Romans under the Emipre," will recommend to many readers this classic work. It will shortly be reprinted by Messrs. D. APPLETON & Co. The deliberate judgment of the reviewer classes MERIVALE with MACAULAY and GROTE as forming "the second great triumvirate of English Historians," and regards his work as a splendid monument of learning, candor and vigorous grasp of intellect. One of the most readable articles, "Pomology," notices with due praise HOVEY'S "Fruits of America," and traces the gradual culture by which our present garden fruits have been produced from the original wild and almost worthless stocks. "The Roman Bar," "German Universities," and "Hopkins' Moral Science," and all articles that deserve attention. Critical notices of thirty-three new works conclude a number of more than average interest.

THE NATIONAL QUARTERLY REVIEW, edited by E. J. SEAS, No. xii., March, 1863. New-York.

This young Review shows signs of active and vigorous life, displaying itself in a more aggressive tone and a less restrained treatment of topics of the day than characterises its elder rivals. The first article, "The Works and Influence of Schiller," is an able review of the Poet's literary career, and an exposition of the essential differences existing between him and the author. His name is most frequently coupled with GOETHE. "Astronomical Theories" is an attack (somewhat startling, if real,) on the Copernican system of the universe, and shows how much may be said in favor of the old Ptolemaic theory. "Insurance Quackery and its Organs" commends itself to the interested parties. "Orators and Eloquence," and "The Culture of the Human Voice," treat intelligently of kindred subjects. "James Sheridan Knowles" is a pleasing sketch of the great Irish dramatist's biography, enlivened with some graphic traits derived from personal acquaintance. The literary notices are classified under appropriate heads, and are good specimens of the trenchant style of criticism.

THE AMERICAN PRESBYTERIAN AND THEOLOGICAL REVIEW. Edited by Prof. H. B. SMITH and J. M. SHERWOOD. April, 1863.

The controversies of the day find admission even to the "regions mild of calm and serene air," in which a theological journal habitually dwells—or should dwell. "Freedom betrayed by the Evangelical Alliance of England," is a caustic exhibition of the inconsistency between the professions and the acts of religious bodies in England, while "Philosophy and Theology in Conflict," by Dr. HICKOK, and "Bishop COLENSO on the Pentateuch," by PROVOST GOODWIN, of the Pennsylvania University, show similar critical ability employed on strictly appropriate subjects. A vivid picture of Dr. LYMAN BEECHER is given by one of his old pupils, Dr. JOSEPH F. TUTTLE. The purely theological articles by Dr. SKINNER, Prof. H. B. SMITH, the editor, &c., are worthy the reputation of the Review, and the literary intelligence is distinguished for its fullness of information respecting the intellectual movements of England and the continent of Europe.

THE BOOK OF DAYS, A MISCELLANY OF POPULAR ANTIQUITIES IN CONNECTION WITH THE CALENDAR. Edited by R. CHAMBERS. Parts 10, 12. Philadelphia: J. B. LIPPENCOTT & Co.

To all who feel at some weary moment or other like the poet, that the present "World is too much with us," we recommend The Book of Days; it is full of the oldest and quaintest Old World stories, curiosities of literature and human life and character, anecdote, biography and history, scraps and sketches, literary and pictorial, &c. It offers something for every taste, and carries us at once back to days more picturesque, though less "high pressure," than those we have fallen on. The name of that most successful caterer for popular instruction and amusement, the editor, ROBERT CHAMBERS, is guarantee for the general excellence of the work.

THE PRISONER OF STATE. By D. A. MAGONY. 1 vol. 12mo. New-York: CARLETON.

The subject of this work, as well as the style of its treatment, remove it from the domain of literature into that of cotemporary politics. The editor of the Dubuque Herald writes with all the bitterness of an extreme partizan, and keeps no bounds in his language when his assumed wrongs are the theme. To the future historian, who can hold even-handed the scale of political justice, the statements contained in this book will have their value, though the guise in which they appear is little creditable to the good taste of the author, who may be satisfied that no such work would be allowed to appear in any country where the visions of despotism and tyranny conjured up by his heated imagination actually prevailed.

LULU, A TALE OF THE NATIONAL HOTEL POISONING. By MANSFIELD T. WALWORTH. 1 vol., 12mo. New-York: CARLETON.

A great outrage on propriety is exhibited in the choice of a subject for this book, where a painful and fatal catastrophe is interwoven with a fictitious love story, as the subject of a novel. If anything could heighten the want of feeling and delicacy displayed, it is the fact that the author himself was a sufferer, who narrowly escaped with his life. Prominent characters in Washington society are said to figure in the story.

THE LAST TIMES AND GREAT CONSUMMATION. By JOSEPH A. SEISS, D. D. 1 vol., 12mo. Philadelphia: SMITH & ENGLISH.

A laborious and correct discussion of the Millenial Theory, and the bearing of Scripture prophecy on the events of the day as foreshadowing the approaching end of the world—subjects that we are told, on good authority, are apt "to find a man mad, or leave him so." With commendable caution, the author will not decide positively that LOUIS NAPOLEON is the personal Antichrist of the last days, but is strongly inclined to believe that he is.

THE EVERY-DAY PHILOSOPHER IN TOWN AND COUNTRY. By the Author of "Recreations of a Country Parson." 1 vol., 12mo. Boston: TICKNOR & FIELDS.

The Country Parson continues his mild moralities to the delight of all his readers, but we are happy to recognise in the present series symptoms of additional vigor of thought and expression, and strenuous protests against prevailing forms of social oppression and petty tyranny that we credit to Mr. BOYD'S independence, show there is no danger that any quantity of popularity will cause him to degenerate into a Tupper. Those who are acquainted with the actual position of a Presbyterian minister in Edinburgh, will admire the outspoken way in which the Judaising strictness of the Scotch Sunday, as attacked in the Essay on "Disagreeable People." "At the Land's End" is a charming topographical sketch. "Concerning Cutting and Carving," an exposure of the way in which editors of Poetical Miscellanies (and notably, COVENTRY PATMORE in the Children's Garland,) cut and carve the best of their sentences, in defiance of all right and propriety.

THE PIONEER BOY, AND HOW HE BECAME PRESIDENT. By WILLIAM M. THAYER. 12mo, Boston: WALKER, WISE & Co.

We doubt the propriety of treating the career of a man like ABRAHAM LINCOLN in the style of this little work. The few well-known facts of his life are made the basis of imaginary scenes and characters to the confusion of all real truth. Until our good substantial President becomes a mere myth, what the author terms calling the aid of the imagination to connect authentic facts, may be allowable when dealing with remote times and little-known personages, but seems sadly out of place when applied to living people, and it is a mistake to dress up the youthful life of our President with a false glitter of fanciful ornament, while holding it up as an example for the young. With this exception, the purpose and object of The Pioneer Boy is good, and the execution such as to insure its popularity.

OBSERVATIONS ON CHINA AND THE CHINESE. By W. L. G. SMITH, late United States Consul at Shanghai.

Mr. SMITH has turned his official experience to good account in the preparation of this unpretending volume. It is full of information and scarcely contains a superfluous word. There is no personal narrative, but each chapter discusses certain topics relating to the country or its inhabitants; and Mr. SMITH'S local knowledge often enables him to illustrate many points—as the oppression practiced by the courts of justice and their officials; the working of the commercial treaties; the accumulation of property among the people, &c., with novel and curious information. Wealth is more common in the great commercial cities than we are apt to imagine, and always consists of solid silver bullion. Mr. SMITH says Chinamen, worth a million and a half of dollars, are "often met with," while those possessing from $75,000 to $150,000, "are fallen in with in throngs." In the Province of Tientsin lives the wealthiest man in all China, who may compare notes with our ASTORS and STEWARTS, and is worth finding out by Mr. CHASE. His riches are estimated at "thirty-five millions of taels," or about fifty millions of dollars. An interesting account is given of the ports thrown open to European trade, by means of the various treaties with foreign Powers. Few think of Shanghai as a city of a million and a half native inhabitants, with a floating foreign population of ten thousand. Mr. SMITH says that there is a great demand for small steamboats, suited to river navigation, and that they are rapidly coming into the possession of the Chinese and modifying their old habits. He thinks the Taeping Rebels will be put down by the European aid now given to the Imperial Government, though doubting the wisdom of the policy which has furnished it.

WANDERINGS OF A BEAUTY, A TALE OF THE REAL AND THE IDEAL. By Mrs. EDWIN JAMES. 12mo. New-York: CARLETON.

A pleasing copy of one of THORBURN'S forcible and spirited miniatures appropriately heads this volume, and predisposes the reader to a favorable judgment. It represents a charming face, of the Irish type of beauty, and if it is the "counterfeit presentment" of the authoress, certainly countenances the title of the book. The tale itself, which is partly autobiographical, partly by a sympathizing friend, has its scenes laid in various countries of Europe, and shows no inconsiderable acquaintance with the higher phases of life in France and Italy. The scene shifts afterward to New-York, and here, under a thin disguise, actual persons and events may probably be recognized. It is a book certain to excite a wide curiosity.

MADGE; OR, NIGHT AND MORNING. By H. G. B 12mo. New-York: D. APPLETON & Co.

If H. G. B. is new to the world of fiction he is to be congratulated on his first appearance. The tale shows that the writer views the lights and shadows of New-England life with a sharp and clear insight and reproduces them with much graphic power. He has humor and pathos at-will. The fortunes of his heroine, commencing with her lowly station and uncongenial surroundings, until the gradual arrival of brighter days, will be traced with attention by all who begin the book. We prophecy for Madge a reception that will lead to a further acquaintance between H. G. B. and the public.

MAN'S CRY AND GOD'S GRACIOUS ANSWER. A Contribution Toward the Defence of the Faith. By Rev. B. FRANKLIN. 18mo. New-York: D. APPLETON & Co.

An earnest and thoughtful argument for the truth of the Christian scheme, as taught by revelation. It is based upon admitted facts of our common humanity, and is intended to meet the more recent and covert assaults on Christianity by the latest school of philosophical sceptics.

—According to expectations, the Spring Trade-sales of the Publishers have met with great success. The demand for standard books, at remunerating prices, was steady, and often called for more copies of a work than the publishers were prepared to supply. Most districts of the loyal States and Canada were well represented among the purchasers, from Maine to California, and books are widely diffused among them in moderate quantities for actual consumption, rather than purchased in quantities for speculation. The arrangements of the sales seemed to give every satisfaction to dealers, and afford promise of a larger and more important gathering of the same nature in the Fall, under the same auspices.

—The literary journal and organ of the book trade, The American Publisher's Circular, formerly edited by CHARLES RODE, has passed into the hands of Mr. G. C. CHILDS, the Publisher, of Philadelphia, so well known for the spirit and enterprise of his business career. It is the object of the new management to make it a journal which no bookseller, librarian or book-buyer in this country can afford to do without, and the best talent available, both domestic and foreign, will be employed for that purpose.

—The recent royal marriage, so lately the absorbing topic in England, is to receive its due share of graphic and historical illustration. "W. H. RUSSELL, Esq., LL. D., late special correspondent of the Times," becomes its historiographer, and a prospectus is issued of a splendid volume, illustrated by the pencils of accomplished artists, in which he will narrate the progress of the future Princess of Wales, from her embarkation and reception by the British fleet to the marriage ceremony at Windsor. The plates will reproduce the portraits and costumes of the leading persons present, and the magnificent bridal gifts, "with the utmost splendor of dress and jewelry, in gold and colors." A grand gallery picture, commissioned by the Queen, and painted by Mr. G. H. THOMAS, will commemorate the scene at the altar of St. George's Chapel. A superb chromo-lithographic facsimile of this is now preparing, limited to 1,000 copies, and to be issued to subscribers at ten guineas each.

—The literature of Spiritualism has taken a new development in England, where the respectable conservative house of Messrs. LONGMAN'S has just issued WM. HOWITT'S History of Supernaturalism in all Ages and Nations, Christian and Pagan, and Incidents of my Life, by D. D. HOME, the famous medium and spirit seer. Mr. HOWITT'S book records his complete conversion to and belief in the modern spiritualitive developments, testifying in his own person to the truth of some of the most wonderful. It also proves that there are no new things, but traces such manifestations upward to a remote antiquity. It will be presented to the American public by Messrs. J. B. LIPPINCOTT & Co. Mr. HOME'S narrative is equally startling, and details the marvels that lay around the paths that led him from a humble origin in America to be the husband of a Russian Princess and the cherished companion of crowned heads. It will be brought out in New-York, with a preface from Judge EDMONDS, by Mr. CARLETON.

—Few books have lately made more sensation in Paris than LABOULAYE'S clever and spirited work, Paris en L'Amerique. By means of a somewhat fanciful machinery he brings into striking contrast the differences between the two countries, such as are most obvious to an outward observer, as well as the more important and deeply-seated variations arising from the influence of national culture and institutions. A translation is in press by Miss MARY L. BOOTH, whose revisions of Count GASPARIN'S writing have been so widely circulated, and will be published by Mr. C. SCRIBNER in the course of the present month.

The eyes of the same man are not the same eyes in different moods, which must persuade him to look on a work of art with very different impressions, depending more, if possible, on the prepossessions of his own mind than even the necessary conditions of proper daylight, distance and freedom from outward sources of disturbance.

When I first saw this fine picture in this City my mind had been so long prepossessed with objects so foreign to the quiet illusions of art, that I was inclined to be provoked with the painter who undertook to interrupt the practical, though disagreeable current of my thoughts, with a challenge, as I perversely seemed to imagine, of instant admiration; and, like Sir JOSHUA REYNOLDS before RAPHAEL, I did not admire or understand at first blush. Knowing, however, the artist's peculiar knowledge, his sensitive genius and quiet strength—secluded as he has so long been in the Highlands, like some American Fra Angelo—I was led to visit it again. I criticised, complained of this and that, relented now and then, was drawn back again, until, beginning to learn my own deficiencies of vision, I was at last completely conquered and converted; and of this tumult, which he had innocently created, the artist quietly at home was entirely unconscious.

My expectations must have been founded on something like a scene on the stage, with its array of pretty worldly women, or an exhibition of grand aristocratic faces, which, though so rare in reality, we often like to hang up in our houses, until we sometimes even begin dreamily to imagine a sort of relationship growing up between us. But when I comprehended the painter's intention, I saw that he had drawn from real life; and instead of giving us mock-heroic looks and a religious face called up for the occasion, had represented the natural, and, as it were, almost village-like expression, which every one who has been long in Rome has noticed as a peculiar charm of many of the Roman people, including the nobility, and even Pope PIO NONO himself.

While I came to the picture with but little thought, the painter had the advantage of having woven in many thoughts, which gained on me one by one, and insensibly led me captive. I cannot refrain from reciting my perverse experience and conquest, because it is the simple truth, and the truth is excellent always.

Artists will acknowledge the complete success in mastering the difficulty of venturing on such an expanse of white in the prominent figures, as demanded by the real facts of the scene; and in avoiding all mere scenic and melodramatic temptations, it is painted in all its details, with a truth and realistic observance of reflections and suffusions of light that cause unexpected charms to come out and grow on you continually, with every new visit and changing hour.

The subject takes just that element of the Catholic which is universal in interest, representing, as it does, one of those picturesque passing clouds in the history of human thought—seeming often to suggest transient shadows that have passed through our own minds, and which, by some delicate apprehension through which our hearts are touched, must always continue to possess a certain tender charm to the imagination.

It is told of WHITFIELD that while preaching somewhere on a Summer afternoon, a stream of sunshine suddenly illuminated the church, while a rainbow attracted all eyes, glowing through the eastern windows. He stopped for a moment in admiration, and then, with all the charm of his musical voice and perfect articulation, said, in the words of the Son of Sirach:

"Look upon the rainbow, and praise Him that made it; very beautiful it is in the brightness thereof. It compasseth the heaven about with a glorious circle, and the hands of the Most High have bended it."

This incident, which I had not thought of for many years, came suddenly to my mind, the other day, while looking at the picture, and beholding it bright and fair as a marriage—with the light spreading cheerfully over every prominent part—the prismatic colors coming in from above, and resting there, "an ornament giving light in the highest places of the Lord;" it seemed no extravagant fancy to think. Is it to the little heaven in the maiden's breast that the sun in heaven answers, as his rays come so frankly in, and with acknowledged air of prerogative, like some celestial visitor, enchants with his princely presence the quiet atmosphere of the scene, as with a gentle triumph?

Whether I am extravagant or not, I say what I feel spontaneously; and as WILKES declared to GEORGE IV., that he had never been a Wilkesite himself, so am I a special misliker of the modern extravagant style of bepraising pictures—into which I may seem for my sins to have been permitted to fall myself. But it is not my fault so much as the painter's, and it would be strange if a study of a few hours, for a few days, could not reveal more excellencies than I have seen in a picture painted like this, by a man of decided genius, who has given the ripening of his skill and knowledge in a work to which he has fondly devoted the leisure days of many a Summer.

The shadow of the pulpit extending across the pavement, and gliding up the step of the altar, may scarcely be observed at first, until the eye, wandering into this shade, is taken with a new satisfaction in discovering unexpected natural reflections and liquid glimmers, seen within this unobtrusive shadow on the threshold. I like the simplicity of design in introducing the single clustered column, and planting it in the right place, where it seems to lose its graceful height to give the other parts their proper balance and proportion.

There is a peculiar charm, to me, in the poise of the statue relieved against the transept window, suggesting the firm but delicate footing of some sentinel angel, smiling at danger, and seeming to give yet assurance of easily maintaining the balance of the right and just.

Among incidental striking effects, I must not omit to notice the effective and very original representation of the venerable hands of the bishop—from which, as they appear to tremble with emotion, a blessing seems to linger over the maiden's head.

The simple unconsciousness of the mother, absorbed in prayer, and the prostrate devotion of the novice are perfectly natural; while the home-like and gentle face and bearing of the pastor who presents the wreath, recalls a face such as we rarely meet with; and the look of natural piety, and simple thoughtfulness, our best ideal of a good minister—CRAUCEN'S and GOLDSMITH'S man of God:

> At Church, with meek and unaffected grace,
> His looks adorned the venerable place.
> And though he holy were, and virtuous,
> He was to sinful men, not dispitous.

If, however, you fancy that the whole effect is in this main group, and insist on being absorbed in it, you will lose, I think, the secret charm of the composition, which lies in the variety of treatment and mingling of effects and colors. On your left, where you see the nave stirring with the cheerful people, something sends your eye in busy search from the pleasant confusion of the stained-glass window into the dusky arch above, over the angels on the organ peak, to the balcony of choristers, who, in the uncertain light, may seem a part of the sculptured company of saints and angels inhabiting the church, and altogether making up a singular subdued life in that quiet recess—not a little enhanced by the broken patches of yellow light on the façade of the transept arch, "making a mellow sunshine in a shady place," just where it is needed. And a peculiarly fine effect is produced by the slant-broken light above on the organ, subtilely suggesting a continuous vibration of the pipes, to which a writer in one of the morning papers may allude almost unconsciously when he says "We seem to hear the waver of the organ." The baldaquin, so familiar in Roman Churches as a canopy for altars, is well introduced as a simple fact and reality, and is boldly employed by the painter for the deep shade over the bishop's head, and also as an admirable foil for his delicate lines and lights and shadows.

It would be unjust to the artist, who is strong enough to ask no favors, if I did not allow myself the natural satisfaction and credit of being critical too, as well as admiring, and, therefore, I would like to have the statue of Faith raised up from the drooping position, that would seem rather the attitude of Penitence. I would also prefer to see the face of the boy who holds the bishop's mantle, instead of the back of his head.

Who is to possess this stately religious picture, I do not know; but if it is taken to Boston, as I hear it may be, I fear it would scarcely return to us; for our gentile Christian brethren of the modern Athens have often shown a greater tendency than we have to snatch, now and then, a gentle thought from what is universal in Catholicism, and are not afraid to look upon it with sympathy, if they do not ever venture to adopt it as their own.

The painting, I believe, is yet to be seen at the studio of Mr. JOHN WEIR, the son of the artist, in the Studio Buildings, in Tenth-street. AMATEUR.

Army Officers and the Cotton Trade.

THE INVESTIGATION IN ST. LOUIS.

CHARLES GERALDIN was examined on April 14, before the Military Commission in St. Louis, of which Gen. MCDOWELL is President. The following is part of his testimony:

Q.—Do you know if any military officer or officers in the service of the United States has or have been engaged in the traffic of cotton, or have been in any way, directly or indirectly, concerned or interested in it, or the profits from it? A.—I know of one instance, Sir. A Capt. Cox, of the Fifth Illinois cavalry, acknowledged to me himself that he was buying cotton. He was stationed with his company at Dr. Hubbard's place, which is about four or five miles below Helena. A good many members of his company were sent there to recuperate, and protect the negroes on the adjoining plantations, and during this time he operated in cotton.

Q.—Did he tell you to what extent, or did you learn to what extent? A.—No, Sir; but I have my own idea as to the extent; I should think some forty or fifty bales perhaps; on several occasions he sent this cotton in Government wagons that I saw myself as they came in.

Q.—Where did he sell this cotton? A.—He sold it about Helena.

Q.—How was it taken to Helena? A.—Parties would go down there and purchase of him, and sometimes he would bring it up to Helena.

Q.—How did he send it up? A.—On several occasions, as I remarked, it came up in Government wagons.

Q.—Is this the only case you know of? Yes; there were a great many rumors of officers operating in cotton, but I could not designate them: in this case, however, he acknowledged it himself to me.

Q.—What was the nature of the goods taken to trade for cotton? A.—They consisted of supplies—a little of every thing, such as they wanted—a few shoes, some sugar, some coffee, a little salt sometimes, a little medicine, some flour and some bacon. I never heard of a case of pork. As a general thing, some fifteen or twenty pounds of salt would be all they would permit to any one individual.

Q.—Were these persons of whom you bought the cotton considered to be Union men, or was any investigation made as to that? A.—Well, there were no questions asked as to that.

Q.—If I understand the case aright, the owners of these plantations, or the persons representing them, beyond the points occupied by our forces, would send in and get permits from the Board of Trade for articles to go to these plantations, which articles would be taken down and exchanged for cotton? A.—Yes, in some cases where the parties would come in prior to bringing the cotton, but as a general thing they would bring the cotton, and themselves get the articles and return with them.

Q.—How were they sent down to them? A.—They would take them in their own wagons or teams.

Q.—How was it when they lived on islands or on the opposite side of the river? A.—They would take them over in the ferry-boats plying between Helena and the opposite shore.

Q.—What ferry-boats were there at that time. A.—Government ferry-boats.

Q.—Were you ever in any boat that went up or down the river for cotton? A.—Yes; down the river on two occasions which I have named—on the Williams and Planet.

Q.—Was the Williams at that time a chartered boat? A.—I think she was in Government employ.

Q.—Have you ever shipped any cotton to Memphis? A.—Yes.

Q.—On what boat? A.—The steamboats Gladiator and Kenton.

Q.—Did you ever pay anything for these freights? A.—I paid regular freight.

Q.—Did you know at that time that the Gladiator and Kenton were under Government charter? A.—The Kenton, from what I could learn, was entirely in the control of Gen. Gorman, that is, regulated by him.

Q.—Do you mean under his personal control, or under his control as an officer? A.—I went up on several occasions on the Kenton, and the clerk told me they had to do as Gen. Gorman dictated to them in reference to going up or down the river; that the proceeds arising from the trips of these boats were paid over to the Government.

Q.—To whom? A.—I do not know to whom it was paid; my understanding was, that it was paid over to Gen. Gorman; I know the clerk told me the profits were some $800 or $900 per week; Mr. Reppert was the clerk of the boat.

Q.—What amount of cotton did you ever ship to Memphis on your own account, or on account of anybody else? A.—I should think between 200 and 300 bales.

Q.—What was the freight on this—how much per bale? A.—We paid during the Gladiator's time $3 per bale, and during the Kenton's time $5 per bale to Memphis.

The Treatment of Non-Combatants.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN GENS. TILGHMAN AND ROSS.

The Western papers publish a correspondence which has recently transpired between the rebel Gen. LLOYD TILGHMAN and Brig.-Gen. L. F. Ross. In a letter dated at Headquarters, Camp Loring, March 30, Gen. TILGHMAN asks that the family of Mr. HENRY FERNANDIS may be allowed a passage through Gen. Ross' lines, as that gentleman, he says:

"The father of these little motherless children, himself partially blind, has been seized and is now a prisoner in your hands. Mr. FERNANDIS was a peaceful and unoffending man, one who had committed no act against those of your command or Government, and his arrest left four little girls and a son, the oldest not twelve years of age, and the youngest an infant of only three months, to the mercy of a few servants. Not satisfied with thus ruthlessly depriving them of their only protection, your soldiers, though appealed to by the elder children and the servants, most inhumanity killed the only cow left them, and from which the little motherless infant drew its only nourishment.

Let your war be upon fathers and sons—they ask no favors; but, for humanity's sake, strike not a blow at such helpless innocence as that which now suffers from your rule.

I do also most solemnly protest against the practice of arresting peaceful and unoffending citizens of the Confederate States. Parties offending against this will most assuredly be held to a rigid account for the same."

Under date of March 31, Gen. ROSS replies:

"Mr. FERNANDIS was arrested by one of my officers some days ago, in the vicinity of where one of my steamers had been fired into by guerrillas, under circumstances which induced the belief on the part of the officer that he had been engaged in some of these cowardly outrages. Owing to my temporary absence when Mr. FERNANDIS was brought in, he was sent off immediately, without investigation of his case. It was only last evening that I was advised of the condition of his family, and early this morning the wife of Gen. FISK, of my command, went out to visit the children and tender them every assistance necessary. A surgeon was sent out to prescribe for one or two of them, who were reported to be needing medical aid.

Information having been obtained as to the relations of their family at McNutt, a note was sent to them through Dr. CURTIS, a citizen of this vicinity, pledging them safe conduct through our lines to remove the family and effects of Mr. FANANDIS, having become satisfied that Mr. FERNANDIS was innocent of the crime of which he was suspected, though the circumstantial evidence was ample to warrant his arrest.

I had last evening, before the receipt of your communication, made application to the Major-General at Helena, to whom he was sent, for his immediate release, with a statement of facts, and of my belief that he was innocent.

Permit me to call your attention, General, to the fact that all these hardships to which you allude, and which I deplore as much as yourself, are to be directly traced to the cowardly practice of guerrilla warfare by irregular forces and pretended non-combatants—a practice in violation of all the laws of war, but which, I regret to say, seems to be encouraged by your authorities.

It is a practice productive of no results, but which places those who engage in it without the pale of civilized warfare, and often, as in the present instance, through the difficulty of obtaining proper information, involves innocent persons in serious difficulties.

If citizens desire to oppose our entrance into this country, if they will connect themselves with some regular military organization, we are ready to meet them, and, if they fall into our hands, accord to them the honorable treatment of soldiers; otherwise they become bandits and assassins, and it is a stretch of magnanimity to regard them when captured as prisoners of war. Mrs. Gen. FISK has not yet returned from Mrs. FERNANDIS'. When I hear from there, if the relatives of the family from McNutt have not made arrangements for their removal, I will cheerfully send them to your lines, as requested, by a flag of truce, and, as it is too late to admit of this being done to-day, will do so as early to-morrow as convenient."

SATURDAY, April 18—P. M.

The price of Gold Coin declined 2 ₰ cent. to-day, closing about 151 ₰ cent. The extreme fluctuations of the day were 152¾@150⅞ ₰ cent. After the steamer sailed this forenoon there was nothing done in Exchange. The rates have ruled all through the week from 1@2 ₰ cent. below the relative figures at which Gold Coin could be shipped to profit. The entire shipments of the week of Gold and Silver of all descriptions amount to only $158,000. In the Share market to-day there was a large business, at firm prices, on a few particular or special stocks, such as Harlem, Pittsburgh, Hudson River, Fort Wayne and Northwest. Other Roads were comparatively dull, and both classes of Erie a fraction lower than on Friday, though at the very close new buyers of Erie Common came into the market, at 78¾@⅞ ₰ cent. The general market left off about as follows, compared with Friday night. Treasury paper was firm, at an advance of ⅛ ₰ cent. on the sales of Friday.

The Journal of Commerce is right in saying that we have interpreted the Act of Congress, stamping Loans upon Gold Coin at par, at the rate of ⅛ ₰ cent. and 6 ₰ cent interest while such Loans is made or permitted to run. A demand Loan cannot be made in this way in contemplation of running over three days. A demand Loan to be paid, without renewal, within three days, is subject to no special stamp. In reference to our knowledge of any attempt to evade the law in this respect, whether by "a friend" or "any other man," we answer the Journal emphatically that we do not know of any such case. If the Journal's writer is otherwise posted, it would, perhaps, be too much to expect of his sense of what is due to the General Government in matters relating to Customs and Internal Taxes, that the above should be exposed.

Trade Between the Northwest and Europe.

MEMORIAL OF THE ILLINOIS COMMISSIONERS TO THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF CANADA.

The memorial of the Commissioners appointed by the Illinois Legislature to urge upon the Canadian authorities the necessity and propriety of doing something to expedite the opening of more direct channels of trade between England and the West, is published. After descanting at length upon the fertility of the West, and giving statistics to show the immense amount of its agricultural products, the memorial says:

"It is the opinion of your memorialists that the cost of transportation may be reduced ten shillings per quarter, or thirty cents per bushel. One-half of this sum added to the income of our farmers would give a remarkable stimulus to the production of grain, and would lead, in a few years, within five years at the furthest, to the production of a surplus exceeding the total of the present importation of grain into England from all countries. And it is equally true that the present heavy freight charges, consequent upon the inadequacy of the means of transportation, will diminish the production of grain and divert agricultural labor and enterprise into some other and more remunerative channel. We think we are warranted in expressing the opinion that a moderate expenditure devoted to connecting the Canadian rivers with the great lakes in Canada, so as to permit steam navigation to Montreal, and, if practicable, a direct trade with Liverpool, will open to England a supply of breadstuffs as large as she now imports from every other country, at the lower rates of first cost, and thus give the control of the grain markets of the world to the largest purchaser.

The interior of North America is drained by the St. Lawrence, which furnishes for the country bordering upon the lakes a natural highway to the sea. Through its deep channel must pass the agricultural productions of the vast lake region. The commercial spirit of the age forbids that internal jealousy should interfere with great natural thoroughfares, and the Governments of Great Britain and the United States will appreciate this spirit, and cheerfully yield to its influence. The great avenue to the Atlantic through the St. Lawrence being once opened to its largest capability, the laws of trade, which it has never been the policy of the Federal Government to obstruct, will carry the commerce of the Northwest through it.

In concluding, we will say that we come as the agents of the Government of the State of Illinois, not intending to transcend the limits of our power, and carefully avoiding the assumption of any of the functions of the Federal Government in its international relations, but to present to the Provincial Government of Canada, and through it to the British Government, such facts concerning the vast resources of the Northwestern States, their capacity for production of the cereals, and the difficulty in reaching tide-water with their products, as will tend to the opening of direct trade between those States and Liverpool."

The Negroes.

ADJ.-GEN. THOMAS DECLARES THE INTENTIONS OF THE GOVERNMENT.

The following speech was made to the troops at Helena, Ark., on April 6, by Adj.-Gen. THOMAS:

"I thank you, fellow-soldiers, for the warm and hearty reception which you have given me. I receive it not as an ovation to myself, but to the Government which I represent.

I am here to-day to announce to you the policy which has been adopted by the Administration in the further prosecution of this war. I come with authority to carry it out fully, and, with your favor and co-operation, successfully.

It is well known that the rebels have had great advantage over us, in the fact that they have all taken the field against us, leaving the blacks behind at home to work for them and support them. We now propose to take these blacks, to feed, clothe, organize and arm them. (Tremendous applause.) We can thus starve the rebels into submission, or force a large proportion of their army to lay down the musket and take up the shovel and the hoe. [Applause.] The negroes have fled to us for protection, and have been treated badly. [Hear.] The consequences have been that many have been driven back to their masters, while many more have been deterred from venturing within our lines. This must cease. [Cheers.] Our pickets must be instructed to receive these unfortunate fugitives kindly, and to welcome them within our lines gladly. I have full authority to organize a regiment of blacks at Helena, and to commission white men as officers of the right character and stamp. [Cheers.] We propose also to establish colonies of blacks along the river upon the deserted plantations. I was born in a Slave State, was nursed by a negress, and I think I know the negro's character and capacity. I believe that the blacks will make good soldiers. We have already two regiments that have done good service and proved themselves capable and brave.

I have just organized at Memphis eight companies as artillerists, and I propose to do the same here. The policy of the Administration must be carried out, and no opposition on the part of officers and soldiers will be allowed. Even the stars will be no protection to the officer, who by act or word opposes the policy of the Government, which I have just enumerated in your hearing."

The closing sentence of the venerable looking soldier, as well as many others in his short and pertinent speech, was received with most enthusiastic applause by the audience.

Gen. PRENTISS followed the Adjutant-General with a most eloquent and thrilling appeal to the soldier, rousing their patriotism to burning heat.

AUCTION SALES.

SCRANTON COAL AT AUCTION.

OFFICE OF THE DELAWARE, LACKAWANNA AND WESTERN R. R. Co., No. 26 WILLIAM-ST., NEW-YORK, April 14, 1863.

In continuation of the system of monthly auction sales, this Company will offer at public auction, on WEDNESDAY, April 22, 1863, at 12 o'clock, noon, at the room now used as the Merchants' Exchange, Nos. 26 and 28 Exchange-place, corner of William-st., by SIMEON DRAPER, auctioneer, embracing all the usual sizes, and deliverable at their depot, Elizabethport, N. J., after the 1st of May next. They will repeat such auction sales on or about the 20th of each month, during the year 1863.

THIRTY THOUSAND TONS OF FRESH MINED SCRANTON COAL,

The sale will be positive. Each lot put up will be sold to the highest bidder; no bids, in any form whatever, being made for account of or on behalf of the Company.

Fifty cents per ton, in bankable funds, to be paid at the time and place of sale, and the balance in like funds, on receiving the order for the coal, which must be called for within ten days thereafter, and the coal taken away within thirty days from the day of sale, unless navigation is obstructed. Buyers who wish, however, can have an additional thirty days for taking the delivery of their purchases, by making a further deposit of fifty cents per ton, within the ten days above specified. Interest, at 7 per cent. per annum, will in such case be charged on the balance, from the time stipulated for payment until paid; and twenty-five cents per ton to cover the expense of stocking the coal, both to be paid on delivery of order.

The other conditions of sale will be substantially those hitherto accepted by all purchasers, by private contract, of Coal deliverable at Elizabethport, as far as applicable. The coal will be delivered direct from the cars on their arrival from the mines, when practicable—otherwise from the stock. These conditions will be modified to meet the wants of ocean steamers, whose arrival cannot be definitely fixed.

With a reliable avenue from the Lackawanna and Wyoming Valleys to tide-water, open every day in the year, (Sundays excepted,) requiring but twelve hours for the transit of the trains, the advantages of such sales, and the superior condition in which the coal will be delivered, are so apparent, they cannot doubt this mode of selling will commend itself to the favorable consideration of both the trade and consumers, whose cooperation is respectfully invited.

The Progress of the Broadway Railroad Bill—The Quarantine Bill—The Bill for the Relief of Sick and Wounded Soldiers—Passage of the Bill to Amend the Metropolitan Police Act—Conference on the New-York Harbor Defence Bill—The Railroad in the Wilderness—The Dummy Bill Passed, &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Friday, April 17, 1863.

The progress of the Broadway Railroad bill in the House is not as rapid as its friends desired or expected. It was made the special order for yesterday, 4 P. M., when an unusually full house came together. After a good deal of preliminary sharp skirmishing, during which the Yeas and Nays were several times called by the opponents of the bill, Mr. DEPEW opened a battery, into the jaws of which, with singular lack of generalship, its supporters marched deliberately. The ninth joint rule requires that whenever more than ten bills are ready for a third reading, the House shall proceed to read them. In reply to the inquiry of Mr. DEPEW, the Speaker said there were more than ten bills ready for a third reading, whereupon Mr. DEPEW demanded the enforcement of the ninth joint rule. There was no alternative—the Speaker had no discretion. Mr. T. C. FIELDS moved to suspend. This required two-thirds. On this the ayes and noes were demanded, and the result was—ayes 50, noes 58. And so the House refused to suspend, and proceeded under the joint rule, but very soon adjourned. "Some one has blundered" was felt, particularly by supporters of Broadway, to be as significant as when the remark was made on a more important occasion.

Two very important bills were passed by the Senate, to wit: the first, to define the powers and duties of the Health Officer, and to locate the Quarantine of the port of New-York; the second, to provide for the relief of sick and wounded soldiers, which appropriates $250,000. The main features of both of these bills I have heretofore given. The last named has been amended so as to obviate some of the objections urged by the United States Sanitary Committee. I am convinced, however, that such a law will prove to be not only an unnecessary expense, but mischievious in its practical operation. The Quarantine act is one of the most important measures before the Legislature at its present Session. In addition to defining the powers and duties of the Health Officer, it provides for a new Quarantine establishment in the Lower Bay of New-York, besides hospital ships, warehouses, &c.

The Metropolitan Police Bill, which has for so long a time awaited an uncertain fate in the House, passed this morning. The prime object is alleged to be, to divide the Commissioners, and, consequently, the Police force, between the two parties. I do not think the House had any definite idea of what the Bill really was, this general understanding being deemed sufficient.

The New-York Harbor defence bill will go to a Committee of Conference, the main difference being on the point, the House wanting $1,000,000, the Senate $500,000.

The earnest friends of the measure extending a helping hand to the railroad into the northern part of the State—"into the wilderness," in the precise language of the bill—were gratified to-day in seeing it through both branches, and on its way to the Governor. The "Mohawk Valley and Piseco Railroad" had previously passed, and a bit of fun had over the free tickets so kindly and promptly issued, contracting to convey the holders thereof, "with hunting and fishing tackle," to an indefinite destination in the John Brown Tract.

The Senate returned to the House the Supply bill, with a message that they had made eighty-three amendments thereto, and asking for a Committee of Conference. Mr. DEPEW, the faithful and able Chancellor of the House, was placed at the head of the Committee, and the joint auxiliary will doubtless have a good time of it.

That which has been familiarly denominated the "Dummy" bill, providing that the Brooklyn Central and Jamaica Railroad Company may use the dummy engine to the city line of Brooklyn, and in Atlantic-street during certain hours, has passed both Houses. It provides that the sum paid under the act closing the Atlantic tunnel shall be paid back.

The House bill, empowering the Mayor and Comptroller of New-York City to appoint Marshals, was lost in the Senate, and a motion to reconsider lies on the table.

The House gave between forty and fifty bills a third reading in the space of about two hours this morning, thus clearing the calendar. The ninth joint rule is not likely to be operative at once.

The announcement of the bill "to enlarge the State Prisons" was made the occasion for some remarks by certain indecorous individuals, as though such a bill could, by any possibility, have the slightest significance in connection with this Legislature. The prevalent air of dignity, the sense of rectitude and patriotic fidelity of the House, promptly frowned down this exhibition of malice and slander.

The Calliost Investigation.

REPORT OF THE MINORITY OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE.

The undersigned, a minority of the Committee appointed by this House to investigate the charges of official misconduct, preferred against Hon. Theophilus C. Callicot, Speaker of the Assembly, by Hon. Thomas C. Field, a member of this House, respectfully

REPORT:

That they entered upon the discharge of the unpleasant duty assigned them with a full appreciation of the responsibility of the position they were called upon to assume. While they have been actuated by a sincere desire to render entire justice to the accused, and claim to have been ever regardful of his rights, they have also endeavored to vindicate the honor, the dignity and the integrity of this body by bringing to light, so far as in their power, all the facts pertinent to the case under consideration.

The undersigned commenced this investigation impressed with the belief that the House desired a searching inquiry into the charges made against the Speaker, and was desirous that equal justice should be done to all parties, in order that the member suffering under the imputations made against him, might be fully exculpated if innocent, or properly punished if guilty. They did not regard it in their province to act either as counsel to shield an offender from the consequences of official misconduct, or as partisans whose effort it should be to make innocence appear like guilt. Acting in good faith under this belief, and influenced by these motives, they have found themselves necessitated, in the course of this investigation, to differ with the majority of the Committee upon questions involving the scope of the inquiry, and the admission or rejection of evidence.

At the outset, when the question arose as to the limit of the investigation, the Committee unanimously decided that, under the resolution adopted by the House, the examination should be confined to the charges relating to the official conduct of the accused during the present session, and unanimously resolved to strike out all the charges of corruption prior to that date.

After the Committee had unanimously agreed thus to limit the investigation, the counsel for the accused moved to further restrict the inquiry by striking out specifications five, six, seven and eight, of charge sixth, alleging that the votes and official action of the Speaker had been governed by the consideration of his election to the office of Speaker, a position of advantage and profit; and also charge eighth, which was as follows:

CHARGE EIGHTH.—Bribery and corruption as a Member of the Assembly.

The majority of the Committee ruled to sustain the motion, and thus further limit the investigation, from which ruling the minority dissented, and stated their reasons in writing.

The minority of the Committee, in arriving at the conclusion that it is "corrupt and criminal" for a Member of Assembly to accept and take the office of Speaker with an agreement and understanding that his vote or action shall be influenced thereby, or shall be given in any particular manner or upon any particular side of any question in consideration of such office, are guided in their judgment by the words of the statute, which declares that "every member of the Assembly who shall accept any gift, thing of value or advantage, or furnish the same, under any agreement or understanding that his vote, opinion, judgment or action shall be influenced thereby, or shall be given in any particular manner, or upon any particular side of any question, matter, cause or proceeding then pending, or which may by law be brought before him in his official capacity, or who shall directly or indirectly demand, require, propose to receive, receive, or entertain any negotiation or proposition for any such gift, thing of value or advantage, as a consideration, or motive for his official vote, action or influence, shall, upon conviction, be forever disqualified from holding any public office, trust or appointment under the Constitution or laws of this State, shall forfeit his office, and shall be punished in a State Prison not exceeding ten years, or a fine not exceeding $5,000, or both, in the discretion of the Court."

It is an evasion to claim that a vote directed by considerations of personal advantage and profit to the voter is not corrupt within the meaning of the statute, because it is cast in pursuance of "the law of the land."

Every vote cast in the Legislature is cast in pursuance of "the law of the land." "The law of the land" makes it the duty of a member to vote on one side or the other of every question that arises, when he is present. But when a member's vote or action is turned from one side to the other by a bribe, although he votes and acts in pursuance of "the law of the land," he, nevertheless, brings himself within the grasp of the penal statute, and exposes himself to the penalty of corruption.

The undersigned, entertaining these views of the ruling of the majority of the Committee, felt it to be their duty to protest and did protest against this limitation of the investigation—as in fact a suppression of a portion of the inquiry, with which the Committee had been charged by the House. And they now call the attention of the House to this restriction upon the investigation, and state it as a reason why the result of the Committee's labors does not present the full revelation of all the circumstances connected with the charges in question, which the House, in ordering the investigation, and the people of the State, had a right to expect.

Under the ruling of the majority of the Committee, as above set forth, there still remained to be investigated the grave charge that the accused had received the sum of $1,200, upon an understanding that his official action was to be influenced thereby—a charge embracing two points of inquiry—first, the fact of the payment of the money; and, second, the consideration or understanding upon which it was paid. The first point involved a simple matter of fact; the second a question which usually had to be determined from surrounding circumstances, rather than by direct proof of a formal corrupt agreement.

The first witness produced on the part of the people was Mr. Hope, of Brooklyn, who proved that Mr. T. C. Callicot had been for some time indebted to Mrs. Woods, a widow lady residing in Brooklyn, in the sum of about $1,200, for certain bank stock, the property of Mrs. Woods; that about the time Mr. Callicot was presented as a Speaker of this House, the witness came to Albany and applied to Mr. Callicot for payment of this amount, informing him that he had a document in his possession which he should make use of if the money was not paid. This document, it afterward appeared, was addressed to Hon. T. C. Fields and related to the transaction between Mr Callicot and Mrs. Woods. Mr. Callicot offered Mr. Hope, in settlement of the claim, the sum of $200 in cash, and an order upon the Clerk of the Assembly for $300, in anticipation of his pay as a member, informing him that he had no more money at his command. Mr. Hope refused the offer, and insisted upon the payment of the whole amount due to Mrs. Woods. Mr. Callicot solicited delay, promising to raise the amount in a few days. Subsequently Mr. Hope called, by Mr. Callicot's appointment, at his room in Congress Hall, and was informed that he should soon receive the money. Shortly afterward Mr. Hamilton Harris, of this city, a member of the Republican State Committee, called at Mr. Callicot's room, when the witness was requested to withdraw for a few minutes. He retired to the hall, leaving Mr. Harris and Mr. Callicot together in the room. In about five minutes Mr. Harris came out, and Mr. Hope returned to the room, when Mr. Callicot immediately paid him the sum of $1,200, taking his receipt in full and requesting him not to say anything about it and not to make the transaction public.

Mr. Hamilton Harris was then examined as a witness on the part of the People, and testified that, at Mr. Callicot's request, he called upon him on the 10th of January; that he had then no personal acquaintance with Mr. Callicot; that upon learning from Mr. Callicot the character of Mrs. Woods' demand, he advised its settlement, and Mr. Callicot told him he thought he could borrow the money; that he called upon Mr. Callicot the following day, and was informed by him that he could not obtain the money; and that thereupon he, Mr. Harris, without, as he alleges, knowing anything about the pecuniary condition of Mr. Callicot, and without any request from him, offered to loan him the $1,200 as an act of "encouragement," and did on the 21st of January loan, as he alleges, the $1,200 to Mr. Callicot, taking his note, payable to his own order, on demand, without any other security.

One of the important questions before the Committee, in the opinion of the undersigned, was whether this transaction was a bona fide transaction, and so regarded and understood by the parties interested, or whether the money was paid by Mr. Harris, and received by Mr. Callicot, to influence the official conduct of the latter.

It appeared in evidence that Mr. Harris is, and was at the time of the transaction before mentioned, a member of the Republican Union State Central Committee, and of the Executive Committee; that Senator Henry R. Low is, and was at the same time, Chairman of that Committee, and that Isaac Sherman, of New-York City, is and was its Treasurer; and there was produced before the Committee, by Mr. Sherman, a draft in the words and figures following

$1,200 ALBANY, Jan. 15, 1863.

To Isaac Sherman, Esq., Treasurer, Hanover Square, New-York.

Pay to the order of Hamilton Harris, Esq., twelve hundred dollars. H. R. LOW, Chairman.

BEN. FIELD, Secretary.

Endorsed—HAM. HARRIS, THURLOW WEED.

Pay to the order of the Merchants Bank, New-York. R. H. KING, President.

Received payment. Merchant's Bank.

And written across the face "Paid Jan. 22, 1863."

The prosecution offered to prove that the money received upon this draft was the money paid to Mr. Callicot by Mr. Harris, to whose order the draft was drawn, and that the money was not a bona fide loan from Mr. Harris to Mr. Callicot, but was paid out of the funds of the Republican State Central Committee, through its officers, to Mr. Callicot as part of a consideration or bribe to influence his official action and votes as a member and Speaker of this Assembly.

This evidence was objected to by the counsel for the accused, and the majority of the Committee sustained the objections, and the undersigned minority dissented from this decision. After the payment of this money to Mr. Callicot by Mr. Harris had been proved, and after the draft for the same amount, drawn by Hon. H. S. Low, to the order of Mr. Harris, had been produced in evidence, this minority felt that they could not fully discharge their duty, and carry out what they believed to be the desire of this House, without thoroughly investigating every circumstance connected with the transaction. A bribe is never paid or received openly, and without some attempt at concealment, for its payment and acceptance render both parties amenable to the criminal law. The money paid to corrupt a public officer is usually given in the form of a loan or present.

The minority of the Committee have not arrived at the conclusion which they are called upon to submit to this House, without feelings of painful regret. But the duty they owe to the House and to the people demands that they should not suffer personal considerations to interfere with their action in a matter of such vast importance to the welfare of the State.

The evidence allowed to be taken has established these leading facts: That Mr. Callicot, while a member of this House, received from Mr. Hamilton Harris, a member of the Republican State Central Committee, an organization theretofore politically opposed to Mr. Callicot, the sum of twelve hundred dollars. That when Mr. Harris advanced this money to Mr. Callicot, he had no previous personal acquaintance with him, had no knowledge of his pecuniary circumstances, and received from him no security for the repayment of the alleged loan. That a draft for the same amount, twelve hundred dollars, was drawn by Hon. H. R. Low, Chairman of the Republican State Committee, made payable to the order of Mr. Hamilton Harris, negotiated in this city, and paid in New-York on the 22d of January, by Mr. Isaac Sherman, the Treasurer of the Republican State Committee, out of the funds of said Committee.

The draft drawn by Hon. H. R. Low bears date the 15th day of January, 1863. On the following morning, the 16th of January, Mr. Callicot was nominated by the Republican party as Speaker, and, for the first time, separated himself from the political party with whom he had formerly associated, and by his votes and action gave the Republican party control of the organization.

In view of all the facts developed by the investigation, the identity of the persons engaged in the transaction, and their subsequent concert of action; the harmony of the dates; the agreement of the amount drawn by Mr. Low, to the order of Mr. Harris, with the amount paid by Mr. Harris to Mr. Callicot; and the surrounding circumstances, the undersigned have arrived at the conclusion, that the charge, that the said Theophilus C. Callicot in the month of January, 1863, and after he had qualified and taken his seat as a member of this House, received the sum of one thousand and two hundred dollars in money, as a consideration and motive for his official action and votes as a member and Speaker of this Assembly, is fully established.

It belongs to another tribunal to administer the criminal law, but it is the province of this House to protect its purity and honor and to drive corruption beyond its walls. The undersigned, guided by the facts of this case and the law applicable to them, would be false to their convictions of duty, did they fail in conclusion to recommend to the House the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the fact is established that money was improperly used in effecting an organization of this House.

Resolved, That this improper and corrupt use of money in connection with legislation is condemned by this House.

Resolved, That THEOPHILUS C. CALLICOT, the member of this House from the Fifth Assembly District of the County of Kings, has been guilty of official corruption and misconduct, rendering him unworthy of a seat in this House, and that he be and hereby is expelled therefrom.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

A Renegade Captain.

THE REBEL ADMIRAL BUCHANAN.

The following authentic copies of letters addressed to the Navy Department by "Admiral" BUCHANAN, of the rebel navy, show of what material that organization is composed:

NAVY-YARD, WASHINGTON, April 22, 1861.

His Excellency, the President:

SIR—I respectfully resign my commission as a captain in the United States Navy.

Respectfully, Sir, your obedient servant,

FRANKLIN BUCHANAN.

"THE RENT," NEAR EASTON, Md., May 4, 1861.

SIR—If His Excellency, the President, has not accepted my resignation as a Captain in the navy of the United States, I respectfully ask to recall it. The circumstances which induced me, very, very reluctantly, to tender my resignation no longer exist, and I cannot voluntarily withdraw from a service in which I have passey nearly forty-seven years of my life in the faithful performance of duty, as the records of the Navy Department will prove. I am ready for service.

Respectfully, Sir, your obedient servant,

FRANKLIN BUCHANAN.

Hon. GIDEON WELLES, Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

New Volcano in Mexico.

Following is an extract of a letter from Mr. JOHN XANTUS, United States Consul at Manzanillo, dated Colima, March 18, 1863, addressed to the Smithsonian Institution:

"The whole town is at present in a state of extraordinary excitement, news having come that a new volcano broke forth yesterday, only six leagues from town. The eruption came so suddenly and was so violent, that the Armeria River was filled up by a barricade of ejected sand, mud and stones, to a height of over one hundred feet. The river, of course, was stopped from coming down, and it is said that north of the barricade the river is running back, and inundating the forest for leagues. The volcano broke out in the top of a hill, only about one hundred and fifty feet high above the level of the Armeria River, but is said to be growing alarmingly every hour. For the past three days we have had many heavy earthquakes."

WESTERN VIRGINIA.

Extract of a Private Letter from Gen. B. S. Roberts.

BUCKHANNAN, UPSHUR Co., Va., April 12, 1863.

A stampede by JECKER'S guerrillas into the Kanawha Valley sent me over into these mountains of Western Virginia, where the first battles of the rebellion were fought, and where the last blows may yet be struck. Virginia seems determined not to give up her territory, and it is supposed that attempts will be made to recapture this western portion. It is possible that the attempt may be made, but I do not see any policy in it, or that any great results could be expected. There are few supplies in the country, it is exceedingly difficult of access, and as a route for an invasion to Ohio or Pennsylvania, it presents great obstacles to a large army. The most that will be attempted, in my judgment, will be guerrilla raids for the destruction of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and for plunder and theft. That I mean to break up.

I am greatly exercised about the Charleston and Vicksburgh news. I have confidence that both expeditions will succeed, but great sacrifices must be expected. Both places are Sebastopols in their strength, and defended by troops fanatically resolved to hold them. * * * * *

Your affectionate brother,

B. S. ROBERTS.

An Important Order from Brig.-Gen. B. S. Roberts.

HEADQUARTERS FOURTH BRIGADE, MIDDLE DEPARTMENT, BUCKHANNON, Va., April 6, 1863.

TO THE LOYAL CITIZENS OF UPSHUR, LEWIS, BARBOUR, RANDOLPH, BRAXTON AND GILMORE COUNTIES.

Clear proof has been received at these headquarters that attempts will be made by the rebels and sympathizers, scattered through your towns and counties, to organize a system of brigandage, rapine, theft and plunder against the loyal people of the new State of Western Virginia, and for the destruction of the railroads, bridges, and the property of the United States. Gov. LETCHER is the instigator of the plan, and his programme, as ascertained by his instructions that have been captured, is to scatter through your neighborhood the young men whose homes are with you—destroy your property, steal your horses, and then assemble at places to be agreed upon, where organization into companies is to be made, and that strength to move rapidly through your most frequented mountain passes and roads, to do the work of pillage and destruction planned in executive council at Richmond.

This system of brigandage is so general in its character, and receiving Executive sanction at Richmond, rises in the degree of its atrocity above merciless piracy on the high seas, and all parties engaged in it are equally outlawed by the rules of civilized war among all nations.

In view of these small dangers and the annoyance to the peaceful and loyal citizens of your counties, and to defeat and punish the infamous designs of Gov. LETCHER, I recommend through every county to be named, the organization of Union Leagues for defense and offense, if necessary, against the brigands who may attempt this plan of land piracy in Western Virginia. These Leagues should embrace every good and loyal citizen of your counties. They should adopt rules for instant communication and assembling together when there is danger. They should communicate information at once to the nearest military commanders of the movement of guerrillas and other enemies; they should arrest all persons arriving among them known to be rebels, coming from the enemy's lines, or going toward them, and send them to the nearest military commands; they should keep under surveillance the rebels and sympathizers of rebellion, who, living under the protection of the laws of your new State and the United States, basely betray both and covertly serve our enemies. Such traitors, far more ignoble and base than those in open rebellion, are entitled to no sympathy, nor should mercy be shown to them if caught in overt acts of treason.

Beyond general Union Leagues in each county, I recommend Vigilance Committees in every town and considerable neighborhood, of all the enterprising young men. They should see that no rebel is at any time absent from his home or farm, and that his horses, cattle, and other property are not moved.

Fellow-citizens, I need not tell you that, scattered as you are over large counties, and without organization and accord, you are weak, exposed to danger, both in your person and property. You have been taught this fact by sad experience. But it is possible that you are not aware of your strength and power, organized and acting in concert. This idea constrains me to urge upon you organization and vigilance for your own security—for the good of your new State and the General Government.

You will be a host united, and acting of a determined will to defend your homes, your new State and the Union, you will be stronger than armies with banners and the thunder of artillery.

'Tis not the nature of man to be neutral or an idle spectator of this crisis. The man who says he takes no part in a struggle to save his country, threatened by eight millions of rebels and traitors, is dead to loyalty or a rebel at heart. He is our worst enemy—watch him. Compel him to go where his heart is, but where his craven legs refuse to carry him. There he can do you no harm. Here he covertly plots a coward's mischief, and in the dark executes the coward's mission of information and intelligence to our enemies. Drive such men, or rather such counterfeits of men, from among you! In this there is nothing hard or unmerciful, the precept is of divine origin, that "who sows to the wind shall reap a whirlwind."

Horse vs. Wood.

In your article in Friday's paper, entitled "A Straw in the Wind," you say that "Mr. Wood, in his turn, prayed for an injunction and the appointment of a receiver, and his prayer has been granted." This is not so, as the pleadings will prove. It was I who prayed for and obtained an injunction, and the appointment of a receiver. I merely wish this matter corrected, as I do not desire, in the present state of the case, to enter into any newspaper controversy. Respectfully, yours,

B. HERTS, Jr., No. 450 Broadway.

The Corcoran and Kimball Affair.

A Suffolk correspondent of the Hartford Press says in reference to this unfortunate affair:

"In my relation of the Corcoran and Kimball affair I committed the error of saying that Lieut.-Col. KIMBALL was on picket duty at the time of his death. I have learned since that he was at Gen. GRIFFY'S headquarters at the time of the unfortunate occurrence; that he halted (of course with no authority) Gen. CORCORAN, who was riding past
